"As to the jailer, he was met by party of us. Not suspecting that any of us could be connected with the family, he was led to talk of the most hideous details with regard to poor Berenice. The child had not, as had been insinuated, aided her own degradation, but had nobly sustained the dignity of her sex and her family. Such advantages as the monster pretended to have gained over her, sick, desolate, and delirious,-were, by his own confession, not obtained without violence. This was too much. Forty thousand lives, had he possessed them, could not have gratified my thirst for revenge. Yet had he but showed courage, he should have died the death of a soldier. But the wretch showed cowardice the most abject, and-but you know his fate.

"Now, then, all is nnished, and human nature is avenged. Yet, if you complain of the bloodshed and the terror, think of the wrongs which created my rights: think of the sacrifice by which I gave a tenfold strength to those rights; think of the necessi ty for a dreadful concussion and shock to society, in order to carry my lesson into the councils of princes. "This will now have been effected

And ye victims of dishonor, will be glorified in your deaths; ye will not have suffered in vain, nor died without a monument. Sleep, therefore, sister Berenice, sleep, gentle Mariamne, in peace. And thou, noble mother, let the outrages sown in thy wide harvest of honor for the women who beat her severely with the butt the poor old cow shaking her bones of thy afflicted race. THE CARE OF BEES. Mrs. Tupper furnishes the American Bee Journal with the following: During the month of November, though we may have some warm pleasant days, bees will remain quiet and fly out very little. All work with them should be done before now, and they be disturbed as little as possible. No feeding of liquids should now be done; it is too late to give syrup. We are certain that much of the fatality among bees has been caused by too much water in the food whether it has been fed to them in the syrup, or they take it in the honey, which being gathered late in the fall, has not lost the watery particles by evaporation. We have seen honey in hives, often in this State. The bees when not able to fly and discharge the feecal matter. are injured by taking too much water. To avoid this, if it is necessary to feed them, give sugar-candy, instead of syrup. We find this the best way of feeding at all times, when bees are not able to fly out every

By the middle or last of this month, according to the weather and time, varying of course with the locality, bees must be put into winter quarters or protected on their summer stands. It is not well to house them up too early.

A cold time should be chosen to take them in, and they should be moved easily, so as not to stir them up. We have carried fifty hives into a cellar without a buzz from a bee; and then again by an unlucky jar, a colony has been stirred up so that it did not quiet down for hours.

Under favorable conditions, bees in the winter, remain very quiet Any noise from the hive is evidence of discomfort. As long as you do not hear from them you may be sure all is well; but if a constant noise is heard be sure something is wrong.

Much has been said about ventilation in the winter. We have found that very little is necessary where the bee-quilts are kept on. These absorb the moisture as it passes off from the cluster, and yet prevent all draughts through the bive.

After your bees are put away for the winter, let them alone. To those who winter them out of doors. we can only say: be sure that you have plenty of honey in the hive, while at the same time they have empty comb, in which to cluster. It will require much more honey for those left out of doors, and they should, by all means, he sheltered from the rays of the sun upon the than cold or snow, as it tempts the for them to fly. We have all seen bee-hives covered with a snow bank for weeks without injury. Whether bees are in houses, cellars, or out-ofdoors, a quilt, carpet, or mat, over the top of the frames, is a gr at protection, worth many times the cost

-A college newspaper significantly remarks: "The President has appointed the 25th of November as a day of thanksgiving, and it behooves every honest citizen to rick out his lying in bed. Another proof of the gain enough to pay for the troble of turkey and wait for a dark night." Mes 216 & 218, 22 St. B. Paul, 2010.
