George Sand on Dreams.
Why these chimeras of sleep? Physical disposition, I shall be told. Well and good; but that does not explain why they have such and such a shape. That relates to an organic mechanism of which we do not know the motive powers, and which remains an enigma to us all.
As our eyes for a long while retain the impression of the solar spectrum which has dazzled them, the mind fills with the objects which have filled the eyes, and the fancy, while it transforms, traces them upon a know not what black chamber, the sanctuary of dreams. Our brain is not, then, a photographic apparatus wherein images are faithfully transmitted. It resembles rather a theater where the facts of life are presented under the form of fiction. But it is richer and more original than all the fictions of the theater. It is the unforeseen in all its power. It is the impossible beforehand; it is the unconstrained festival of the imagination. The serious and the burlesque dance together, terror and joy succeed each other.
Sorrow is often bitter, but its tears flow and wet the pillow. But it most frequently vanishes to give way to unrealizable compensations. The friend who has just left us suddenly returns from an immense journey, which has lasted but an instant; he even, if need be, leaves the tomb to which we have just carried him, and converses with us.
We purrle and gaily die in a dream, and feel ourselves at once living and dead without surprise and without anguish.
Thus, thanks to the fictitious which rock our hours of repose, we spend a notable part of our existence outside of the domain of reality. All the more because it is not necessary to sleep in order to dream. Contemplation leads us almost to a state of highest satisfaction in which reason slumbers, and wandering mind defines and does prolonged than those of a dream none the less escape the control of arguments.
There is, therefore, in us something which is called a soul, and which is perhaps quite another thing from that which bears its name, hitherto, very vague or very ill-defined. I have myself long believed that we have three souls—one to direct the employment of our organs, another to regulate our relations with our species, a third to communicate with the Divine Spirit which animates the universe. Sainte-Beuve used to smile when I said that to him. "Three souls!" replied he; "I dared not answer him that we had, perhaps, more. We are not such simple phenomena as people have chosen to think in order to be able to classify us as good and bad, as elect and condemned."

Was Tecumseh Skinned.
From the Mobile Register.
In November, 1852, the present writer met at Greensborough, Miss., an old gentleman named Elkin, a participant in the battle of the Thames, from whom he heard some accounts of that action which he had never met in print. As for the story of Colonel Johnson killing Tecumseh, Mr. Elkin said it was commonly reported and not questioned at the time; he himself was in another part of the engagement, being under Lieutenant Colonel James Johnson, who broke the British line on the right while his brother engaged the Indians on the left.
Mr. Elkin informed us that the day after the battle the troops were marched out by companies to gratify their curiosity by looking at the scene; that precaution being adopted to guard against possible danger from lurking Indians. His company was the first to reach the ground, where Tecumseh fell, and they found his body from the back of which "raccoon straps" (that was his expression) had been cut. The company, composed chiefly of relatives of the man who had been slaughtered at the River Raisin, in that massacre to which Tecumseh had put a stop at the risk of his own life, manifested great indignation at this

A SCENE IN ROME.
The Ceremony of Missing St. Peter's Too.
Sunday, March 10, was the third day of a triduo held in the church of St.
Peter's. A triduo, writes a London Times correspondent at Rome, is a church service or act of devotion, performed and continued for three consecutive days. The special object of the one just held, and which was celebrated by the Association for the Promotion of Good Works in concert with the Vatican Chapter, was to offer reparation for the horrible blasphemies with which, in these latter days, infidels have denied the presence and the death of St. Peter in Rome.

A NORMAN WOMAN'S STORY.
Revelations by an Elder's First Wife—The Horrors of Polygamy.
Mrs. T. B. H. Stenhouse, whose husband has been widely known for the past twenty years as a Mormon elder and missionary, has just written a book exposing the secrets of the Mormon delusion.
It is entitled, "A Lady's Life among the Mormons; a record of personal experiences as one of the wives of a Mormon elder during a period of more than twenty years." A few extracts from her history will show the nature of her revelations, and the bitterness of her resentment toward the leaders of the Mormon church.
