A MARRIED LOVE LETTER.

Your letter was received, dear John.
I write as you request,
And send the white-winged tidings from
Our little love-built nest.
We miss you sadly, night and morn,
That odious Mr. Dent
lias called at least a dozen times
To dun you for the rent.

You say it seems an age, my love, Since last you went away; But then it's quite a comfort, dear.
To know the trip will pay.
We're saving every penny we can, And living very pain;
I had my pocket picked last night, While walking through the rain.

You count the lagging hours, dear,
That keep you from my side;
For, as you fondly say the wife
Is dearer than the bride.
That Miss Mediste has sent her bill,
I know you'll be amused,
I never got one-half the things—
The creature must be crased!

The children—precious little peta!

Ask daily for papa.

They all have had such shocking colds,
I called in Doctor Law.

He fears that Nettie's lungs are weak—
She seems inclined to stoop.
The baby has the nottle rash,
And Sammy chronic croop.

And, oh! mamma and Mr. B.

Have has an awful fuss;
Of course she couldn't stay at Em's.

And so she's here with us:
The girls have "given warning," love;
I don't know what to think.

Unless, as dear mamma suspects, They're both inclined to drink.

I'm feeling sad, and far from well!
But then I know, dear John,
A long home letter, just like this,
Will cheer and help you ou.
I'd like to nestle to your breast
And have a hearty cry;
Pray don't forget the grocer's bill!
God bless you, love! Good-by!

WHY SHOULD YOU INSURE?

BECAUSE YOU ARE SURE TO DIE, AND YOU CANNOTTELL HOW SOON. A POLICY of Life Insurance makes a present security of what otherwise is at best a future contingency. If you are poor new, it wil pretect your family or dependent ones against want, in case of your death, at a small cest. If you are rich now, it is by no means certain that you always will be. In this country, poor men often become millionaires, and millionaires often become poor men. If you are in moderate circumstances, in a permanent place, at a go described the scanning high wages as an artisans, a life policy hits your case exactly. On a salary, or on day wages, you can't lay up meney rapidly; but you can, with self denial, be paying up a life or endowment policy of five or ten thousand dollars. Bither way you look at it, a life policy in a sound company is a good thing. It is a man's DUTY to throw every protection possible about his wife and children.

The report of the committee was followed by a general publication of state-ments on the part of everybody. Ajax and Menelaus each made new statements more terrible than their original ones. The Pythonesis who had been away on a voyage to Egypt returned and made a weekly statement for three months with ont intermission. Cassaodra made her statement claiming that Paris was innocent because she had originally called him guilty. Helen and her waiting maid cent because she had originally called him guilty. Helen and her waiting maid both made statements, but they were so full of impossibilities, that they were hooted at. The mother of Helen made her little statement, occupying forty-

The original papyri from which I have taken these facts are now on their way to Berlin, and in a few weeks will doubtless be published in full.

From the Port Huron (Mich.) Commercial.]

About eight years ago there lived in Port Huron a man who was well known to most all of our citizens. He was a painter and photographer by profession. His children were three daughters, of more than ordinary personal attractions, whom he seemed to try to bring up as nearly as he knew how in the way they should go. He was a strict member of the Methodist church, and endeavored.

Paris was, however, not the mere handsome guardsman whom Homer described, but a young Prince of geat promise, who had already written a number of popular works, and who was engaged white at Messene on a "Life of Prometheus."

Menelaus does not seem to have suspected any intimacy between the handsome Trojan and his wife until the latter, in a moment of remorse, caused by overindulgence in weak tea, made a confession to him. He therefore met Paris at the house of Ajax, who was the friend of both, and, after obtaining a confession from him, agreed to hush the matter up.

The mother of Helen made her little statement, occupying forty-eight closely-written columns of the Troy Whig, impartially calling every-body concerned in the scandal horse-thieves and drunkards, and ending with a request that some one would appoint her brother Collector at Corinth. Public opinion, which at first had been somewhat favorable to Paris, completely changed. There was a universal demand that the man who had been the cause of so many statements should die. The coalition of the Greek chiefs was the result of this demand, and Homer tells us how the great vengeance of heaven fell upon Paris and involved his whole army of supporters in his ruin.
