GEN. FRANK CHEATHAM.

His letter to a Citizen of Memphis. Review of the action of the Late State Convention.

NASHVILLE, Sept. 6th, 1872.—Thomas C. Lowe, Memphis, Tenn.—My Dear Sir:—Pardon me for any seeming delay in answering your very kind letter...

Col. Burch, the Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee.

Col. Burch, the Chairman of the Democratic Central Committee, had called a meeting of the committee at their rooms the day previous to the assembling of the State Convention...

A CANDIDATE.

Col. John C. Burch was made the Chairman of that Committee. The bill spoken of did pass Congress, and at the urgent request of friends, I become a candidate...

THE NIGHT PREVIOUS TO THE CONVENTION.

The night previous to the convention the most of the delegates arrived. The friends of all parties were very active in trying to ascertain who would likely get the most delegates...

REMEMBER ME TO ALL MY OLD COMRADES.

Remember me to all my old comrades with whom you may chance to meet, and tell them never fear to do right and speak the truth.

IT IS SAID THAT AT LEAST HALF THE DELEGATES TO THE LATE LOUISVILLE CONVENTION WERE STRAIGHT OUT RADICALS.

The Prairie Farmer cries out against the slaughter of the buffaloes. Over 25,000 of them have been killed for their hides alone.

A. J., in his Columbia speech.

A. J., in his Columbia speech, inquired: "Who was Mrs. Serratt?" Macbeth made a similar inquiry regarding Mr. Bangou, when he saw the well-stabbed ghost of that clever gentleman popping into the royal chair at the banquet.

Right or Wrong.

The Clarksville Tobacco Leaf defines the issue between the people of Tennessee and Andrew Johnson in the following pointed manner: "We are opposed to Johnson because his election would be an endorsement of his course in the war."

Done Enough for His Country.

A revolutionary soldier was running for Congress, and his opponent was a young man who had never been to war, and it was the custom of the old soldier to tell of the hardships he had endured. Said he: "Fellow-citizens, I fought and bled for my country. I have helped to whip the Indians. I have slept on the field of battle with no other cover than the canopy of heaven."

Mothers.

Some one has said a young mother is the most beautiful thing in nature. Why qualify it? Are not all mothers beautiful? The sentimental outside beholder may prefer youth in the pretty picture, but I am inclined to think that sons and daughters, who are most intimately concerned in the matter, love and admire their mothers most when they are old.

Why This Thunders.

The Memphis Avalanche is now supporting Andrew Johnson warmly, and we wish to enquire why its editor has "flopped over" so suddenly? But a few weeks ago the following appeared in the columns of the Avalanche: "Andrew Johnson does not like Greeley, and we are sure Mr. Greeley has no love for Johnson."

Settled at Last.

We clip the following from one of our exchanges: "The vexed question of the proper mode of baptism was thus disposed of lately down South, by 'Uncle Caesar,' a colored preacher: 'Now brethren,' said he, 'I hear a great fuss about these words in and into; and folks want us to believe that deey mean under, and dat wen de Scrip'ter speaks of an individual going down into de water, de Bible, mean to say dat he went under de water. S'pose some day I goes ober to see Brudder Solomon, and Brudder Solomon wery politely ask, 'Uncle Caesar, come into de house,' do anybody s'pose dat dis here nigger would go under de house?"

A Good Wife for Somebody.

A Mississippi girl just out of school, hired a few negroes last season and undertook to carry on the farm at her homestead. The results at the end of the year were eight bins of potatoes, six hundred bushels of corn and nine hundred and sixty-nine dollars in cash from the sale of cotton after all expenses were paid.

No Doubt of It.

A man in Cincinnati is organizing a brass band of twenty women. He says that if they learn to play one-half as many airs as they put on, it will be a perfect success.

At Folsom, California.

At Folsom, California, a hog drank so much sour lager, through out of a brewery the other day, that it became thoroughly drunk and behaved in a most discredit manner for a hog.

Reminiscence of Grant.

When in the beginning of the war in Missouri, Gov. Jackson, of that State, was organizing his military camps he felt greatly the need of educated military talent to instruct his new recruits. The State was young, and one of her sons who had been educated at West Point had risen to any distinction in the army. The Governor saw the best blood of the State was rushing to his standard, but he had sagacity enough to see that something more than raw valor was needed to make an efficient army.

He accepted the latter and thus became an officer in the army in the North.

The Governor of Illinois had butted the Missouri Governor and got his man. And this man who thus narrowly escaped a position in the "rebel army," is held out to the black man as his peculiar friend, his special champion. Professor D., whom I know well to be a truthful man, related to me in person the above facts in the city of St. Louis since the close of the war.—[Shreveport Telegraph.]

The matters detailed in the above were made known to us by a reputable citizen of Houston, who was, personally cognizant of the facts.

There was, however, according to our recollection, one slight though not material variation, viz.: that the proposal was first made to Gen. Price and through him to Gov. Jackson, and that the place offered Grant in the Rebel army was less in rank than that offered by the Governor of Illinois. Our informant at the time, and an intimate friend of the Professor (Grant's relative by marriage,) when the proposal was made, and through this informant it was communicated to Gen. Price. The witnesses of these matters are yet living, and the facts can be proven. Our informant is now absent, but will be long return, and we shall submit the matter to him for his evidence, and such is his position that it will not be questioned by any candid man. The facts show that Grant was a mere adventurer, ready to draw his sword in favor of the side offering him the largest place or position. It is also charged against Grant that he declared that he would not fight to free the slaves but the evidence of this we have not so positively as the other. Still, if he could accept of the larger place on the Union side at the very time he was negotiating for a place on the "rebel" side, he was capable of anything for his own aggrandizement. Without a Rawlins to plan for him, he never would have attained a name, and when the former died, his good genius died with him.—[Houston, Texas, Telegraph.]

Tenacity.

The Montgomery Advance tells the following of a gentleman of that city who recently joined the sons of Temperance: After becoming a "son" he went to Mobile on business, and was taken ill there. A physician was called in, and prescribed brandy. Our hero told him he could not take it. The doctor insisted that it was a proper remedy; but the patient told him he would not take it. The doctor said he must or he would have spasms. "Well said our Good Templar, 'I will try a couple of spasms first.' He has recovered and is doing well and he says he wouldn't take any if a rattle snake was to bite him. We glory in his spunk."

Late Plowing.

The Fat Contributor, encouraged by Mr. Greeley's success in writing about farming, says: "A correspondent asks us what we think about late plowing. Plowing should not be continued later than ten or eleven o'clock at night. It gets the horses in a bad habit of staying out late and unduly exposes the plow."

The Pittsburg Post says.

Tennessee delivered herself from carpet bag rule in 1869, and has been increasing in wealth and prosperity ever since. It was in 1869 that Tennessee got rid of that carpet bag rule fastened on the State by Andrew Johnson when he was Brigadier General and Military Governor.
