THE CHANGES OF A CENTURY.
A little more than a hundred years ago, there was no such white man in what is now Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. Then, what is now the most flourishing part of the United States was almost as little known or heart of Africa itself.

It was not till 1776 that Boone left his home in North Carolina to become the first white settler in Kentucky. And the first pioneer of Ohio did not settle there till twenty years later still.

A little more than one hundred years ago, Canada belonged to France, and Washington was a Virginia colonel, and the United States the most royal part of the British empire; and scarcely a speck in the political horizon indicated the struggle that in a score or more of years was to lay the foundation of the greatest republic of the world.

Yes, think of it, a century since there were only four small newspapers in America; steam-engines had not been imagined; locomotives, and steam-boats, and railroads, and telegraphs, and postal-cards, and friction-matches, and revolver, and breech-loading guns, and stoves, and furnaces, and gas for lighting dwellings, and sewing machines, and reapers, and mowers, and horse-rakes, and seed-drills, and steam-pipes, and India-rubber shoes, and aniline coal, and photographs, and chrome paint, and kerosene oil, and the safety lamp, and the compound blowpipe, and the free schools, and the spring mattresses, and wood-engravings, and Brussels carpets, and lever watches, and cotton and woolen factories, in anything like the present meaning of these terms, were utterly unknown.

Think of it, we repeat. A century ago the spinning-wheel was in almost every family, and clothing was spun and woven, and made up in the household; and the printing-press a cumbersome machine worked by hand, and used, or a brick, or a knife, or a pair of shears or scissars, or a scissor, or a woman's pair of scissors, or an axe, or hoe, or shovel, or a lock, or a key, or a bar of rolled iron, or a pane of glass of any size, was not made in what is now the United States. Even in 1790 there were only seventy-five post-offices in the country, and the whole extent of our post-routes was less than one hundred miles.

Cheep postage was unheard of, and had any one suggested the transmission of messages with lightning speed, he would have been thought utterly insane.

Will another century see as many discoveries and improvements in the science and in the arts, and in the application of both to the progress of civilization, and the enterprises of business and the comforts of life? We sometimes think we have almost reached the limit of these wonderful improvements, but who can say that the next century will not witness as great advances on the present as the present has on the past?

THE LOVE OF MONEY.

SERMON BY DR. EATON ON THE MONEY MAKING DEVICES OF THE WORLD.
Louisville Commercial.

Dr. Eaton delivered a sermon at the Walnut street Baptist church last evening on the prevailing vices of the times, basing his remarks on the thirty-first verse of the eighth chapter of Luke. The divine prefaced his sermon by reading extracts from the eighth chapters of Matthew and Luke in which reference is made to the demoniacal men and the swine. After Christ had cast the devils out of the men into the swine the animals ran down a steep hill into the sea and were drowned. The Gadarenes, the owners of the swine, dismayed at the loss of their herd, went to Christ and besought him to depart from them. They were fearful that he would be the cause of losing to them all their swine if allowed to remain, and they regarded their hogs of more value than human lives and souls, and preferred their swine to the presence of Christ. Jesus obeyed their request and never returned.

The swine, the speaker said, typifies the sins of the present age. There are Gadarenes in this day and generation, although their peculiar sins are different from those of old times. We now have no demoniacal affections or leprosy that was common in those days, but we have other sins that are equally as great and that require the healing presence of Christ. At no time in the history of the world has the love of money been the root of more evil than now. Adulterations of food is practiced to an enormous extent in order that money may be made. Great cities turn their sewers into the streets, and factories empty their oil into the stream to economize expenses and make money. Factories are poorly ventilated and lighted, and rosy-cheeked children and stalwart forms are prematurely aged in order that money may be made at the sacrifice of human life. Railroads and street cars are run seven days in the week, allowing no time for Sabbath worship or recreation for the employe. Sixty thousand men annually die drunkards in order that money might be made at the expense of human lives and human happiness.

Dr. Eaton then touched upon all forms of gambling. He did not sectionalize, but spoke of it in a general way. Lotteries were a most pernicious form of vice, and did a great deal to debauch young men. He could instance cases in Louisville where young men had been led astray by this form of gambling. Opium-eating is a most baneful influence for evil, and yet a member of Parliament recently stood up in the presence of the body, and, in opposition to a bill looking to the abolishing of its traffic, said: "Let no idea of sentimental ideas interfere with England's prosperity." In regard to the theatres, the minister said that if one could judge of the plays by the posters pasted about the city they were all bad enough. It has been said that human life is not safe in Kentucky, particularizing Kentucky only because it was right to look at home first. The speaker had heard of fifty murders being committed in Louisville since he had resided here, and not a single hanging. If the first five murders had been hanged, the remaining forty-five murderers would probably not have been convicted.

The speaker had often felt thankful that no one had yet discovered a scheme to make money out of yellow fever and smallpox. If it were possible to make money in this way people would be found peddling smallpox in quantities to suit the purchaser, and urging that a smallpox and yellow fever would do no harm. Men were rushing about intent on making money regardless of life or reputation, weakening the bodies of premature, until death stepped in and forced them to take the rest they would not take themselves.

What is a bird of swine in exchange for a human soul? Let Christ cast the devils out, even if it is at the expense of my swine. There is no room for these birds, and the decision should be made in favor of Christ.

"Is there anything wrong in kissing?" he asked her, as they stood together at the gate. "Certainly there is," she replied, "or there wouldn't be any fun in it."

Then Augustus is to preach? Is he to study? or will he be merely a lay member? "I guess he'll be a lay member most of the time. Laying around out of a job."
