

M. CARNOT IN GAIN President of France the Victim of an Anarchist.

ITALIAN COMMITS THE DEED. The Enraged Populace of Lyons Struggle to Lynch the Murderer.

A STRONG ANTI-ITALIAN FEELING. The President Lingers Three Hours in the Throes of Death.

GREAT SORROW IN UNITED STATES. Both Houses of Congress Adjourn Upon Announcement of the Event.

BRIEF TRIBUTES PAID THE DEAD MAN. At the Request of Congress President Cleveland Communicates the Expressions of Sorrow of the United States.

M. Casimir-Perier to Succeed to the Presidency—Sorrow, Dismay and Anger Prevail Throughout France—Action Taken in the Italian Chamber of Deputies.

LYONS, FRANCE, June 25.—M. Marie Francois Sadi-Carnot, President of the Republic of France, was stabbed in the abdomen by an assassin in this city at 9:25 o'clock last night, and died of the wound at 12:45 o'clock this morning.

The President was visiting Lyons in connection with the International Exhibition. Upon his arrival here he was tendered a reception at the Prefecture, after which he visited the exhibition. After spending some time at the exhibition, he proceeded to the Palais de Commerce, where a banquet was given in his honor.

At 9:25 o'clock last night President Carnot started for the theatre, where a gala performance was to be given because of his presence in the city. Several carriages were in the procession, the first one being occupied by the President. M. Carnot's carriage was driven slowly along in front of the Palais de Commerce, and then turned into Rue de la Republique, still following the facade of the palace.

Just at this moment M. Carnot was waving with his right hand and saluting with his left in response to the ovation that was being given to him by the crowd. The people close to him were so excited that they stepped back a knife in his hand. By the glare of the electric lights the assassin, a beardless young man, who was dressed in a brown suit, and wore a peaked cap that matched the suit in color, was seen to fall back in his seat, his face deathly pale. One of his feet was protruding from under the steel that had entered his body.

M. Rivaud, Prefect of Lyons, who was seated beside the President, immediately struck the assassin a full blow in the face and knocked him from the step of the President's carriage. The assassin, however, was not so easily deterred, and he again attempted to strike the President, who was sitting upright in the carriage, shouting "Vive Carnot!" "Vive la Republique!"

When silence was in a measure restored, M. Rivaud continued, "In the Rue de la Republique, the assassin, the first of his name, came up to the President, and with a dagger, he stabbed M. Carnot with a dagger." M. Carnot's attention interrupted with shouts of "Death to the murderer!" "Revenge!" "Revenge!"

Instantly cries of "Le President est assassiné!" "Mort à l'assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the prefecture shouted enormous proportions, every member of the family of the President, and all those who were present, were seized by the throat and held up in the air. The efforts of the sergeants were all in vain, and the efforts of the man who was struck by the President's carriage were all in vain.

expressions of pity for the President and grief for the slain. General Borius, the Prefect and the Mayor, assisted by a number of attendants, endeavored to get the President's carriage, and with difficulty carried him as tenderly as possible to a room on the first floor of the Prefecture and laid down on the bed.

Dr. Gailleton, who is Mayor of Lyons, then examined the wound. The President was lying on the bed, and the Mayor was standing by his side. Dr. Gailleton, who is Mayor of Lyons, then examined the wound. The President was lying on the bed, and the Mayor was standing by his side.

The receipt of the news of the assassination caused a great sensation at the Grand Theatre, which was filled to the walls by the elite of Lyons. The theatre was so full that the ladies were obliged to sit on the floor, and the many military officers who were present were obliged to stand.

The most intense excitement followed this announcement. Women screamed and several fainted. Many men, without waiting to secure their hats, rushed out of the theatre, and many others were standing in the streets.

Suddenly through the throng sped a letter, which was given to the President. The letter was from the Prefect of Lyons, and it contained the news of the assassination.

The President was sitting at the table, and he was eating his dinner. The Prefect of Lyons, M. Rivaud, was standing by his side, and he was talking to him. The President was looking at the Prefect, and he was smiling.

The assassin, however, was not so easily deterred, and he again attempted to strike the President, who was sitting upright in the carriage, shouting "Vive Carnot!" "Vive la Republique!"

When silence was in a measure restored, M. Rivaud continued, "In the Rue de la Republique, the assassin, the first of his name, came up to the President, and with a dagger, he stabbed M. Carnot with a dagger." M. Carnot's attention interrupted with shouts of "Death to the murderer!" "Revenge!" "Revenge!"

Instantly cries of "Le President est assassiné!" "Mort à l'assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the prefecture shouted enormous proportions, every member of the family of the President, and all those who were present, were seized by the throat and held up in the air. The efforts of the sergeants were all in vain, and the efforts of the man who was struck by the President's carriage were all in vain.

January 1, 1888, and would, in the natural order of things, have retired on January 1, 1888.

Immediately after the death of M. Carnot Prime Minister Dupuy started on his return to Paris to officially announce the news to the Senate and Chamber of Deputies.

It became generally known that his assassination had occurred. The news was received with great indignation among the crowd, and it was the subject of many conversations.

M. Carnot's last speech was delivered at the banquet given in his honor. He spoke for about an hour, and he spoke with great dignity and grace.

M. Casimir-Perier was elected President of the Republic of France. He was elected by a large majority, and he was inaugurated on July 1, 1894.

The President was sitting at the table, and he was eating his dinner. The Prefect of Lyons, M. Rivaud, was standing by his side, and he was talking to him. The President was looking at the Prefect, and he was smiling.

The assassin, however, was not so easily deterred, and he again attempted to strike the President, who was sitting upright in the carriage, shouting "Vive Carnot!" "Vive la Republique!"

When silence was in a measure restored, M. Rivaud continued, "In the Rue de la Republique, the assassin, the first of his name, came up to the President, and with a dagger, he stabbed M. Carnot with a dagger." M. Carnot's attention interrupted with shouts of "Death to the murderer!" "Revenge!" "Revenge!"

Instantly cries of "Le President est assassiné!" "Mort à l'assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the prefecture shouted enormous proportions, every member of the family of the President, and all those who were present, were seized by the throat and held up in the air. The efforts of the sergeants were all in vain, and the efforts of the man who was struck by the President's carriage were all in vain.

name, and the confidence that was felt by the entire Republican party in his political worth, have contributed not a little to the reputation of peace which he had earned.

He was a man of great energy and ability, and he was a man of great courage. He was a man of great courage, and he was a man of great courage.

M. Carnot's last speech was delivered at the banquet given in his honor. He spoke for about an hour, and he spoke with great dignity and grace.

M. Casimir-Perier was elected President of the Republic of France. He was elected by a large majority, and he was inaugurated on July 1, 1894.

The President was sitting at the table, and he was eating his dinner. The Prefect of Lyons, M. Rivaud, was standing by his side, and he was talking to him. The President was looking at the Prefect, and he was smiling.

The assassin, however, was not so easily deterred, and he again attempted to strike the President, who was sitting upright in the carriage, shouting "Vive Carnot!" "Vive la Republique!"

When silence was in a measure restored, M. Rivaud continued, "In the Rue de la Republique, the assassin, the first of his name, came up to the President, and with a dagger, he stabbed M. Carnot with a dagger." M. Carnot's attention interrupted with shouts of "Death to the murderer!" "Revenge!" "Revenge!"

Instantly cries of "Le President est assassiné!" "Mort à l'assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the prefecture shouted enormous proportions, every member of the family of the President, and all those who were present, were seized by the throat and held up in the air. The efforts of the sergeants were all in vain, and the efforts of the man who was struck by the President's carriage were all in vain.

the memory of M. Carnot. All of the Italian House closed in honor of the memory of President Carnot.

ROME, June 25.—The House of Representatives today sent a telegram to Madame Carnot, saying: "The blow that struck your husband at the same time my heart."

M. Carnot's last speech was delivered at the banquet given in his honor. He spoke for about an hour, and he spoke with great dignity and grace.

M. Casimir-Perier was elected President of the Republic of France. He was elected by a large majority, and he was inaugurated on July 1, 1894.

The President was sitting at the table, and he was eating his dinner. The Prefect of Lyons, M. Rivaud, was standing by his side, and he was talking to him. The President was looking at the Prefect, and he was smiling.

The assassin, however, was not so easily deterred, and he again attempted to strike the President, who was sitting upright in the carriage, shouting "Vive Carnot!" "Vive la Republique!"

When silence was in a measure restored, M. Rivaud continued, "In the Rue de la Republique, the assassin, the first of his name, came up to the President, and with a dagger, he stabbed M. Carnot with a dagger." M. Carnot's attention interrupted with shouts of "Death to the murderer!" "Revenge!" "Revenge!"

Instantly cries of "Le President est assassiné!" "Mort à l'assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the prefecture shouted enormous proportions, every member of the family of the President, and all those who were present, were seized by the throat and held up in the air. The efforts of the sergeants were all in vain, and the efforts of the man who was struck by the President's carriage were all in vain.

of Louis; but I must confess that never a day weighed so heavily upon me.

The son of this great man was minister of France. He was a man of great energy and ability, and he was a man of great courage.

M. Carnot's last speech was delivered at the banquet given in his honor. He spoke for about an hour, and he spoke with great dignity and grace.

M. Casimir-Perier was elected President of the Republic of France. He was elected by a large majority, and he was inaugurated on July 1, 1894.

The President was sitting at the table, and he was eating his dinner. The Prefect of Lyons, M. Rivaud, was standing by his side, and he was talking to him. The President was looking at the Prefect, and he was smiling.

The assassin, however, was not so easily deterred, and he again attempted to strike the President, who was sitting upright in the carriage, shouting "Vive Carnot!" "Vive la Republique!"

When silence was in a measure restored, M. Rivaud continued, "In the Rue de la Republique, the assassin, the first of his name, came up to the President, and with a dagger, he stabbed M. Carnot with a dagger." M. Carnot's attention interrupted with shouts of "Death to the murderer!" "Revenge!" "Revenge!"

Instantly cries of "Le President est assassiné!" "Mort à l'assassin!" were heard on every side, and the crowd in the vicinity of the prefecture shouted enormous proportions, every member of the family of the President, and all those who were present, were seized by the throat and held up in the air. The efforts of the sergeants were all in vain, and the efforts of the man who was struck by the President's carriage were all in vain.

MR. HILL'S AMENDMENT THAT TAXING INCOMES FROM BONDS WILL COME UP TO-DAY.

No Chance for the Anti-Option Bill to Pass in the Senate.—The Question of Adjournment of Congress.

When the Senate meets to-morrow its first business will be to resume consideration of the anti-option bill. The bill was passed by the House of Representatives on June 22.

THE FINAL NOTE ON THE TARIFF. The opinion several times advanced in the course of the tariff bill in the Senate, was endorsed by the House of Representatives.

MEMBERS REPRESENTATIVE. The members of the House are beginning to grow very restless. With the exception of the month of November, they have spent the winter in the House.

PERSONAL. Ex-Utred States Marshall John G. Watts is here on business connected with the execution of his will.