I CALLED ON HOP SING. Such was my fate when yesterday I visited the laundry of Charlie Hop Sing, on south Seventh street, between Main on south Seventh street, between Main and Cary, for the purpose of ascertaling a little information from the laundryman. Hop Sing is the proud father of a son, who was born to him about two months ago in this city. This is the first Chinese baby born in Richmond. Its parents came from San Francisco about two years ago, shortly after their marriage, and have been in Richmond ever since. Their youthful heir labors under the emphatic if not euphonious name of "Woo Wing," and he promises to some day become a most expert fronce

These facts I gathered from Hop Sing after a long falk, in which I never understood a word he said, and in which he paid not the slightest attention to any of my questions, for the very simple reason that the English language is all Greek to him, his vocabulary consisting of "colin." When they took charge in July, 1894, they reduced the town tax from chairy cents on the 1800 to sixty-five cents, and in the past two years have paid off $14,500 of the town's indebtedness. Hop Sing was whistling the latest national Chinese march, dedicated to Li Hung Chang, when I walked into his establishment. He looked at me for a moment, then paused in his work and said:

"Ki yos II chung foo."
I replied that I did not, but that I wanted to see his baby.
I suppose he meant to ask if I wanted by laundry.

HOP SING IS SUSPICIOUS.

This would never do, and I realized it. I could not afford to spend the day exchanging words with a man when neither of us knew what the other was trying to get at. He evidently was under the impression that I was a fake soap drummer, or the advance agent of the "Bonayoleut Association for the Preservation of the Souls of Eastern Healens," for he kept an eye on me and contend this work.
