Gallipolis Journal

MARCH 26, 1867.

Supplemental Reconstruction

The 11th Congress of this week furnished, by its action, a subject of considerable legislation to which the House of Representatives was called into session. The main object of this legislation was the admission of new States to the Union, and the extension of the boundaries of those already existing. The House, however, did not fail to adopt a large number of important amendments, and to pass several important bills, which were finally referred to the Senate for its action.

The House action of this week was characterized by a spirit of conciliation and moderation. It was evident that the members of the House were desirous of avoiding any further delay in the proceedings of the Union, and of bringing about an early conclusion to the present session. The House, however, was not without its difficulties, and its members were not entirely in accord on all the important questions that came before it. But, in general, the proceedings of the House were conducted with a degree of decorum and respect for the rights of the minority that were remarkable.

The following is a summary of the most important measures that were passed by the House of Representatives this week:

1. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Nebraska to the Union.
2. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Montana to the Union.
3. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Washington to the Union.
4. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Idaho to the Union.
5. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Oregon to the Union.

The House, in addition to the above measures, passed a large number of other bills, which were referred to the Senate for its action.

The Senate, in its action of this week, was characterized by a spirit of conciliation and moderation. It was evident that the members of the Senate were desirous of avoiding any further delay in the proceedings of the Union, and of bringing about an early conclusion to the present session. The Senate, however, was not without its difficulties, and its members were not entirely in accord on all the important questions that came before it. But, in general, the proceedings of the Senate were conducted with a degree of decorum and respect for the rights of the minority that were remarkable.

The following is a summary of the most important measures that were passed by the Senate of this week:

1. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Kansas to the Union.
2. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Colorado to the Union.
3. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Utah to the Union.
4. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Nevada to the Union.
5. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Arizona to the Union.

The Senate, in addition to the above measures, passed a large number of other bills, which were referred to the House for its action.

The action of both branches of Congress this week was characterized by a spirit of conciliation and moderation. It was evident that the members of Congress were desirous of avoiding any further delay in the proceedings of the Union, and of bringing about an early conclusion to the present session. The action of both branches of Congress was also characterized by a spirit of cooperation and unity.

The following is a summary of the most important measures that were passed by Congress this week:

1. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Kansas to the Union.
2. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Colorado to the Union.
3. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Utah to the Union.
4. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Nevada to the Union.
5. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Arizona to the Union.

The action of both branches of Congress this week was characterized by a spirit of conciliation and moderation. It was evident that the members of Congress were desirous of avoiding any further delay in the proceedings of the Union, and of bringing about an early conclusion to the present session. The action of both branches of Congress was also characterized by a spirit of cooperation and unity.

The following is a summary of the most important measures that were passed by Congress this week:

1. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Kansas to the Union.
2. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Colorado to the Union.
3. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Utah to the Union.
4. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Nevada to the Union.
5. A bill was passed, providing for the admission of the State of Arizona to the Union.