A Satisfying Philosophy.

The philosophy of one of the characters in a novel which we recently read was the most satisfying we have ever found. He was not one of the prominent characters, but he was one to whom all of the other characters came in times of trial and stress for advice and counsel.

Why did they come to him and what was his advice?

He was an elderly man, modest and unassuming. He was not the type of man to impress particularly the casual acquaintance. His strength of character and his wisdom were realized only by those who knew him very intimately. He was good; that was his strength and his wisdom. His creed was to always do your duty, to give careful study to every question that arose; to determine what was the right thing to do, then do it and all would then be well for everyone concerned; that we should satisfy ourselves of what was right and then what people generally thought was not important. He never decided the questions of those who came to him for advice. He only told them to find out, to satisfy themselves what was the right thing to do and then do it and all would be well.

His was the doctrine of being true to one's self. It was a practical application of true Christianity, as true Christianity is doing our duty, which is to do right. And we all know that if we do right that we will practice the virtues of charity, justice, love and fidelity, and thus do as Christ would have us do.

The Temperance Plank.

Two proposed constitutional amendments, dealing with the liquor question, will be presented to the voters of Ohio this fall. One of these amendments provides for state wide prohibition and the other provides that Ohio shall never have state wide prohibition and that the township and municipality shall be made the unit for local option elections, thus repealing the present county local option law.

The fight on these two amendments have already aroused great interest among the people and will undoubtedly be the main issue in the election this fall.

What stand did the political parties of Ohio take on the temperance question? As usual the two old parties, Republican and Democratic, failed to take a stand. The Progressive party came out emphatically in favor of state wide prohibition.

The Democratic platform does not directly refer to the matter. It does, however, unreservedly endorse the legislation passed by the last legislature, thus approving the liquor license law, and asserts that the party advocates a short session of the next legislature and the consideration of such matters only as are of general community interest. The inference may be drawn that the party stands for no change in liquor legislation and is opposed to both of the proposed amendments. No one, however, doubts but that to "dry" Democrats one interpretation will be given and to "wet" Democrats another.

The Republicans used a good many words in handling the temperance question, but took no decided stand. Already this plank has been given one interpretation to "wet" Republicans and another to "dry" Republicans. The "dry" leaders are assured that Mr. Willis, the Republican candidate for governor, is a "dry" man and can be depended upon to advance their cause. The "wet" leaders are told that Mr. Willis has carefully refused to state his position and that their interests are in no danger if he is elected. About all that the platform really says on the question is that two constitutional amendments are before the people to pass upon and that the party will carry out the will of the people as expressed upon these amendments. What position the party will take in case both amendments lose is not stated. All that the language used can mean is that it will support the constitution of the state and it would indeed be unusual for a party to take any other stand.

The action of the Progressive party in making its platform so clear that no one can doubt its position is at least refreshing, since we have so long had political platforms which were equivocal and ambiguous. The Progressive candidates can expect and will receive no support from the voters who are opposed to state wide prohibition and should receive the support of those who favor state wide prohibition and consider it of paramount importance.

Those who are opposed to state wide prohibition have their choice between the Republican and Democratic candidates, choosing the one whom they think will best serve their interests.

The Republicans and Democrats also claim that the liquor question is not a political question, but we cannot see why a matter which excites the interest of more people than any other and which more vitally affect their welfare than any other should not be a political question.

A liar very seldom gets away with it, he just thinks he does.

Did you ever try to crank an automobile when the switch plug was not in? If so, you will agree with us that it is not only hard but impossible to start the engine under such conditions.

As this is a family journal, every word of which we hope can be read by every member of any household without bringing a blush to the cheek of the most modest and innocent, in the future we will carefully refrain from making any mention of the present styles in woman's clothes.

Along about the first of each month the financial war which it seems that we must continually wage against the universal allies, appears much more important to us than the European war. At such times we are compelled to bring all our resources into action, but our lines are always forced back with heavy losses, although so far we have been able to keep them intact. Desultory fighting will then continue for the remainder of the month, strenuous efforts being put forth by us at all times to secure a point of vantage, whereby we can repulse the vicious onslaught that will be made the first of the next month.

Acute Indigestion.

"I was annoyed for over a year by attacks of acute indigestion, followed by constipation," writes Mrs. M. J. Gallagher, Geneva, N. Y. "I tried everything that was recommended to me for this complaint but nothing did me much good until about four months ago I saw Chamberlain's Tablets advertised and procured a bottle of them from our druggist. I soon realized that I had gotten the right thing for they helped me at once. Since taking two bottles of them I can eat heartily without any bad effects." Sold by All Dealers.

An Invisible Clock.

An invisible clock that tells the time with a never failing accuracy will be shown residents of Hillsboro when the 101 Ranch Real Wild West comes here on Tuesday, Sept. 15, for two performances at the Fair Grounds. However, this timepiece is only understood by the attaches of the giant exhibition, for it has neither dial nor hands, requires no winding up, and a blind man could tell time by it, but a deaf man could not. It may sound strange to talk about telling time by a band of music, but it is a fact. All the employes measure time by the 101 Ranch Band directed by Prof. De Blanca.

When the first strains of the bugle are heard in the morning you will hear some one say "The parade is ready to leave," and from the time the opening overture announcing that the doors of the "big show" are open until the musical accompaniment for the final number of the program is heard which tells cooks and waiters it is time for dinner, the band is the only clock the wild west folk know. It would sound strange to a layman to hear a groom call to another and ask what time it is, to see the one asked stop his work, listen for a second and then shout back "The ropers are in the arena." Or stranger to be around the dining tents and see one of the stewards listen attentively in the direction of the arena and then suddenly call out "Bread up, the Mexicans are on."

How do they know who is performing when they are so far away? Solely by the music. Every event on the long program has its own particular music and this tune is never changed during the season. The various acts are so timed by a system peculiar to the exhibition alone that the time of the events do not vary one-half minute during the entire season. The employes know what music is played for each event, and the moment they hear the music they know what act is on, and that is their knowledge of time. Should a stranger ask an attache the time he would listen until he heard the music and then would tell him the act. He knows whether this event comes fourth, sixth or twentieth on the program, and could fix the time according to the stranger's way of telling it to within a few seconds.

As all time around a big exhibition such as the Miller Brothers and Arlington will bring here is governed by the show's movement, a better clock could not have been invented. In unloading the three trains, erecting the tents and tearing them down and loading them back into the cars, no one cares what time it is. The working system is so perfected that every minute is occupied, and when there is work to do, the time of day never bothers the working man, for he is there to do all he can, and whether ahead or behind time he could do no more. There is no such thing as being ahead of time with the 101 Ranch, for there is no set time for anything outside of the morning parade and the performances. They utilize every minute.
