Heard and Seen in Public Places

EPUBLICAN campaign leaders were unquestionably correct in that table in which Virginia was put in the doubtful column so far as the nomination is concerned," said a leading Virginia Republican at Murphy's last night, "The twenty-four Virginia votes in the Chicater of the Wenty-four Virginia votes in the Chicater of the Virginia votes in the Virginia be seen what the younger element is going to do about it. My own idea is that Tart is first choice. He is close to the President, and if the latter should ask for a third term he would certainly get the Virginia delegates. There are a few Foraker followers here and there, but the number is not sufficient to carry the whole delegation. However, there will be more or less trading and swapping, and it is possible that some other candidate will walk about with those twenty-four votes."
