HIGH SCHOOL NOTES.

The members of the senior class are sending out their graduation invitations and announcements.

S. B. Tobey will deliver the commencement address this year to the graduates of the rural schools of Langlade Co., at Antigo.

The annual school exhibition was held last Friday and Saturday at the high school. There were exhibits of drawing, penmanship, spelling, arithmetic, language, grammar, geography, history and civics of all pupils taking these branches in the grades. The gym was filled with an exhibit of manual training consisting of all kinds of this work from coat-hangers to library tables, office desks, ornamented lamp stands, Morris chairs, porch swings and couches. The exhibit of cooking and sewing consisted of all kinds of cookery. Soups, breads, pies and pastries and canned fruits were in evidence. The sewing exhibit consisted of exercises from the simplest stitches made on the samples to the most intricate needlework on the party dresses of the girls. One hundred of these garments beautifully worked were on exhibition. No intelligent person after an examination of the work presented could honestly say that the public schools are not adequately performing their duty. The teachers of the various schools deserve much credit for the exhibition, it being one of the best ever shown in our city.

Examinations will be started for the Junior, Sophomore and Freshmen classes next Thursday and they will continue through next Tuesday.

A number of high school scholars have written essays for the Wisconsin Bankers' association essay contest. After these have been examined by local teachers the best essay will be sent from the city to enter the contest proper.

When a Judge Pleaded.

"French law courts often develop phases of humor that can have no counterpart in American or English procedure. Monsieur Hugot is president of the Ninth chamber, one of the courts of Paris. The other day, Maitre C. appeared at the bar, and with many gestures, pointing to his throat, made the court understand that he had lost his voice. 'Yes, maitre,' said the judge, sympathetically, 'the court notes that you have a severe cold, that it is impossible for you to plead. But your client shall not on that account be deprived of defense. If you had been able to plead you would not have failed to show that she had a good reputation and that she stole from her employer to nourish her four children. In short, that the accused committed a fault accidentally, and that she will engage never again to appear before the tribunal. There, Maitre C., is your pleading, is it not? Very well; now the judgment of this tribunal is one month in prison.'

Cargo of Salt Yields Good Profit to Boat Owner.

Craft Goes Upstream in Flood, but the Crew Has to Dig Into the River Bank in Order to Turn Around.

Clinton, Mo.—How a steamboat once navigated the waters of the Osage river, delivered a cargo of salt at Sals Point, Kan., and made a good profit on the deal is told here by Richard Puga, a carpenter, who was the boat's carpenter on the trip and for several years after. Now the once navigable Osage river is a prize sought by water power men and promoters, and Kansas, instead of importing salt, is exporting it.

The steamboat was itself named the Osage. The hull was laid and launched at Linn Creek in the winter of 1856-7 by the owners, who were residents of Linn Creek. The hull was towed to St. Louis, where the boat was finished. It was 130 feet long, 22 feet wide, and when loaded to its capacity of 200 tons drew nearly three feet of water.

It was pronounced the finest little boat afloat in its day, with a cabin capacity of seventy-five passengers, double engines, double boilers and side wheels. It was sold to Captain Lambert, of New York, an experienced boatman, who tried it to Maj. R. H. Melton of Warsaw, Mo., for Benton county land, the consideration being $22,000.

Major Melton placed Elijah Melton, his brother, in charge as clerk, and the Osage made regular trips for eight months in the year from St. Louis up the Osage river, often as far as Pappsville, in Bates county, Missouri, but more frequently going to Osceola, St. Clair county.

The Civil war had destroyed the boating service on the Osage river, and salt was so scarce that a pound would sell at times for $1. Major Melton found plenty of salt at St. Louis in 1867, which had come from Michigan down the Mississippi. He knew if he could get it to the western counties of Missouri the people would pay a handsome profit for it. With George Crawford, an Osage river pilot, the boat was loaded to its capacity with salt in barrels and sacks, and the voyage began.

At Osceola the news came that heavy rains for a week at the headwaters of the Osage in Kansas would keep the river at high water mark; and Crawford, the daring Osage river pilot, said he would try for Sals Point, or failing, he could stop at Bell View, a few miles below.

Sals Point was reached at four o'clock on the afternoon of the following day, and the river was full, but very narrow. It was so full that the presence of the boat forced
