Wisconsin Grain & Stock Co. Comment.

Wheat Comment—The fine weather, indifferent cables and large receipts proved too much for bulls today and there was much unloading of long wheat and a materially lower range of prices. Trade was very good for Saturday but lacked the sensational plunging that characterized the former trading. London reported the continent as being a good seller of cargoes at that point. Northwest receipts, Winnipeg included, were again heavy at 688 cars against 280 received a year ago.

Minneapolis stocks decreased 20,000 bushels for the day to total 12,075,000 bushels, or less than 1,000,000 bushels smaller than last year's large total. The world's shipments are expected to be quite heavy at 11,000,000 bushels as compared with 9,968,000 bushels actual shipped last year. Wheat on ocean passage will, it is expected, show a small decrease. The visible is expected to show an increase of about 1,000,000 bushels. The weather forecast for Sunday calls for excellent growing weather over the entire forecast district, and with the bearish array of statistical news Monday we do not believe that prices will show much if any strength and we would continue to accept profits on purchases and operate conservatively on the short side.

To Fight Freight Reductions.

Baltimore, Md., June 1.—Railroad managements do not care so much for cuts in passenger rates as for those laws which affect the freight earnings. All the lines doing business in Minnesota have banded together to fight freight rate reductions in that state, which go into effect June 1.

Fit in Cell is Fatal.

Burlington, Ia., June 1.—Michael Murphy, who had been locked up in the city jail on a charge of intoxication, fell in a fit, striking his head against the cement floor and fracturing his skull. He died soon after being taken to the hospital. He was a stranger in the city.

Willis A. Joy Resigns.

Grand Forks, June 1.—Alderman Willis A. Joy has tendered his resignation to the mayor. It is stated that the talk of the paving contracts has become so warm that the resignation came about on that account. His resignation caused a good deal of excitement here when the fact became known this morning.

President's Proclamation.

Washington, June 1.—The president today issued a proclamation, announcing the conclusion of the commercial arrangement between the United States and Germany, under the third section of the Dingley act.

U. S. GUN BOAT IS ON HAND

CHANG CHOW, ONE OF THE LARGEST CITIES OF CHINA, TO BE ASSAULTED—CHINESE REVOLT IS SPREADING RAPIDLY THROUGHOUT THE KINGDOM.

Amoy, China, June 1.—Although the rebels were defeated with a loss of 600 men, the government troops did not succeed in dispersing them and they are rapidly recruiting their forces and threatening to attack Chang Chow, one of the largest cities in China. The United States gunboat Helena is here. Amoy is in no danger of attack.

EX-CHORISTER HAS GONE BATTY

"PROF" GLADSTONE MAY BE LOSING HIS REASON.

Former Leader in Musical Circles at Grand Forks, Who Is in Jail on Heinous Charge, Believes There is Plot Against Him.

Grand Forks, N. D., June 1.—"O God save me. They are trying to poison me. Save me from the horrible death."

With such words as the above Paul Gladstone, the erstwhile evangelist and choir leader, covering in his cell in the county bastille, startled Deputy Sheriff Wm. Gilbreath and the other prisoners on Wednesday evening.

Undoubtedly the high tension of a naturally high-strung nervous system is resulting in the breaking down and the cells of an insane asylum are staring the unfortunate young man in the face.

That Carnish, alias Gladstone, is demented, there seems hardly a doubt. He stares at the fellow prisoners with the wild light of madness in his eyes, bounding behind an altar reared from the scant furnishings of his cell whenever approached.

Wednesday night and Thursday morning the jailers had a hard time restraining the unfortunate prisoner, and guards have been set to watch his every move for fear he might do himself bodily harm. At frequent intervals he suffers one of his fanatical spells and breaks out with cries of fear and terror.

Thursday morning while walking down the corridor on his tour of inspection Deputy Sheriff Wm. Gilbreath discovered the following note written by Gladstone:

"Dear Sister: Tell mother not to worry. Mr. Hunt will send her $1,889. That will make her feel better. They have found out about my money and are trying to kill me. Poor Billy has got to try and kill me. Tell Charles to wear his hair long. I'll be out of danger Sunday. Pray for me.

Paul.

As stated above Gladstone suffered his first breakdown on Wednesday evening. The jailer states that he went up to have a look at his charges when he was startled by the sight of the prisoner kneeling on an altar constructed of books, and festooned with flowers. He was gesticulating wildly and asking that he be spared from his enemies.

When the jailer approached he bounded away with the agility of a wild cat uttering shrieks and cries of fear. As he jumped to the darkest corner of the cell his foot came in contact with a parlor match which was lying on the floor. The match lighted with a crack and the bloodcurdling cry which the unfortunate Gladstone uttered startled every inhabitant of the jail.

Dr. Irwin, county physician, was called and chloroform was administered after the doctor had watched the antics for some time. That Gladstone is shamming is the opinion of the medical expert, but if so, he admits that Gladstone is the king of sham-mers.

It is probable the insanity board will be called together and the prisoner examined. The examination may be put off until the return of Attorney George A. Bangs, who is counsel for the young man. Mr. Bangs is in California and is expected the first of next week.

Police Slept at Post

A St. Paul Bluecoat Had a Patent Device by Which He "Buffaloes" His Supervisors—He Carried Alarm-clock in His Hat to Awaken Him.

St. Paul, June 1.—Patrolman Charles Grism was dismissed from the force at a meeting of the police board yesterday because he was caught sleeping at his post.

Police Sergeant Charles Gerber reported that Grism had made a sleeping berth of a tool house on the site of the new St. Paul cathedral, on Summit avenue. Gerber said Grism had a small alarm clock in his hat to awaken him every hour so he could pull the patrol box. Sergeant Gerber said he had watched Grism several nights and found that while he slept nearly all night long, he managed to report to headquarters regularly every hour.

One time he went into the tool house just before the time for the patrolman to pull the box and heard a small alarm clock fastened in the officer's helmet, ring, and this betrayed the patrolman's system.

N. D. PARTY TOURS ALGIERS SLUMS

PILGRIMS ON WAY TO ROME SPEND DELIGHTFUL TIME AT ALGIERS—LIFE OF SIN BALANCED BY ONE OF PURITY AND CLEANLINESS.

Aboard the steamship Romanic, about to touch at Algiers, a dependence of France, May 2.—One more day and sunny Italy will be ours. We have sailed the coast of dark Africa, through a corner of historic Spain, and now touch at Algiers.

It is of the latter city this letter will speak to the Sunday school workers and indeed all of our friends in North Dakota, briefly, after a hurried drive through its beautiful terraced streets, embracing the shadows of darkest Africa and the gladness of esthetic France. Algiers, once a stronghold of the pirate, now a colony of France, governed by French officials and soldiers. At every point can be seen the firm hand and efficient rule of an European people. Five hundred years ago the land lay waste and barren. Now it is the site of one of the most handsomely laid out cities of the world. Its population is almost entirely confined to two peoples, French and Arabians. I wish it were possible to give an adequate pen picture of what one can see in the brief one-day's visit.

At the landing stage 100 carriages were awaiting the Romanic pilgrims and were under orders strictly of the Clark Tour Co. for the World's Sunday school convention people. The ascent to the 3,000-foot cloud-tipped mountains began through the Colonnade de la Republic. This highway towards the mountains runs 31,700 feet along the base of the cliff and cost over $15,000,000. As we ascend, we see a never to be forgotten picture. Terraces of dazzling white, enclined the hills of no mean height, up to the tall towering pointed palm-clad ridges of the eternal heights. Here the purple haze was shrouded by the tinted azure sky. The deep blue sea at its feet. Looking at her, north or south, the city is enshrined in green, beautiful avenues of trees, luxuriant groves of palms, orange, fig and lemon orchards, interlaced with pepper trees and thousands of sweet scented roses. The city is divided into two parts, French and Arabian. The masterful conception of the French artist everywhere abounds, both in its landscapes, perspectives and artistic beauty. Every one of the great terraces at the top of the mountain is cut out of solid rock onto the top of which runs the street car of poor though helpful conveyance. Here the millionaire French family has under hand, Arab after Arab, and for the sum one would ordinarily spend for a day's labor in the United States, a month's work can be gotten out of these people, hence every home is a palace, every garden a paradise. Descending through these delightful terraced home streets, and our carriages are stopped that those desirous of seeing "Arab Town" may do so. Alighting, our guide led the way. What a contrast, here squalor, filth and dirt met the eye in every direction. Tall, windowless houses, facing defiles too narrow for even the narrow burro carts, we saw oriental pictures not to be surpassed in any oriental city of the world.

The streets are so steep and full of vegetable refuse that one's life is jeopardized at every step taken. A narrow street will have as many as 1,500 steps up and then another 1,500 slippery places that without a guide would be like our Hampton court maize. The Arab quarters are the chief scene of interest and deserve the closest study. It is stamped with the antiquity of 500 years, but only in the possession of the French since 1805. In this section of the city may be found a strangely costumed people, wearing what seem large bloomers. The Arab women are robed with similar garb to the man, below the waist. Their quarters are dark and murky, almost not more than four feet wide from their business home and sleeping quarters. Side by side one sees buying and selling, praying and gambling, eating and sleeping, forming altogether a most unique and striking picture. The opium den or drug fiend is not to be found, as the French watch very carefully its introduction, punishing very severely those who seek to introduce it in their midst. Strangers, if there is no molestation, will not be molested, though a guide is the only safe way through these slums, indeed the openings and streets are so narrow that it is said of one of our pilgrims that he met himself five times trying to find his way out.

From a tour of the slums it was a relief to go to the market place, here streets are wider and somewhat cleaner. There are many little neat coffee booths, where for a penny delicious coffee is served. It is prepared while you wait. The coffee berry is not ground, as in the United States, nor is there any mixture, but a stone crushes the berry over a hot stone, then it is brewed over a quick fire and served without cream in tiny coffee pots with a neat cup. The coffee was enjoyed most heartily.

The mosque of the Mohammedan with its fanatical devotees, was a most interesting place. We were allowed in the building, but not in their place of worship, apart from spaces especially prepared by them for visitors. The dark-eyed, bright faced Arab child was a source of general recognition, and if separated from the close and beautiful environments, dressed as American children are commonly dressed, there would be thousands of admiring eyes cast upon this peculiar style of human profile.

A strange feature of this city was the extremes, even amid the Arab life. The degradation that sin and ill living begets is more than counteracted by a life of purity and cleanliness. At the mission one noticed a marked change in the personnel of these converted to the christian religion. Their bright, intellectual faces, open expressions and fearless look showed how much the grace of God can do to win the "uttermost" of which the bible speaks. We left the city as the lights were sparkling here and there, then farther out into the harbor, and looking back, whole terraced streets threw out their lights anew and before we were two miles out our last look at Algiers was toward an illuminated city of magnificent proportions, flooding the avenues as though there was a beautiful display of pyrotechnic preparations, of congratulations that a ship load of interlopers or intruders had left the city for the city's own good. And so amid the visitors at the wharf, and the vendors who had climbed aboard, before the boat left the shore we found ourselves amid the quiet environments of the good ship Romanic, and on our way to Rome.

John Orchard.

POOR GIRL WEDS A MILLIONAIRE

A BEAUTIFUL ROMANCE OF THE FAR WEST.

Humble Daughter of Sweden, Married to One of Spokane's Wealthy Railroad Men, Who Was Formerly Her Employer—Bride 35; Groom 70.

Spokane, Wash., June 1.—All the elements of one of Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tales are contained in the romance of Anna Larson Peterson, born of humble parents in Sweden, whose marriage to her former employer, D. C. Corbin, pioneer millionaire railroad builder and sugar planter, of Spokane, took place at Mt. Vernon, N. Y., May 22. It was not made public until yesterday, a few days after Mr. and Mrs. Corbin returned to Spokane from New York.

Mrs. Corbin is 35 years of age, while her husband is 70 years old. He was a widower. Through his marriage the bride becomes mother-in-law of the Earl of Oxford, whose wife is Mr. Corbin's daughter. Close friends say it is a love match.

The daughter of a small farmer in rural Sweden as a little girl, Mrs. Corbin dreamed of the future and before she attained her majority she came to America, like many of her countrymen and women, to improve her station in life. After working in various households in New England, eastern and the middle western states, she came to Spokane twelve years ago and entered the home of D. C. Corbin as a housekeeper and companion of Mrs. Corbin. She gained the friendship of Mrs. Corbin, who assisted in her education.

Shortly before Mrs. Corbin died, six years ago, Anna married Antone Peterson, but they lived together only a few weeks and the young woman obtained a divorce at Tacoma. Before her marriage, she invested her savings in realty which she sold profitably and with the proceeds went to New York and placed herself under instruction afterwards going abroad with a teacher and three other pupils on an educational tour. She traveled extensively and in the meantime entered into correspondence with her former employer, who asked her hand in marriage two years ago.

She gave her consent several weeks ago when Mr. Corbin started eastward on a business trip, where they were married at the home of a friend.

in the company as its own property.

The elevator company asserted that the grain in the elevators belonged to farmers and they appealed to the supreme court. That court has decided that the only tax that could be collected from the Northwestern Elevator company was on its office furniture, which amounted to about $250.

This is considered a most important decision as it may effect every elevator company in the state in regard to taxation of the grain in the elevators. The assessment on the grain in the Northwestern elevator at the Minneapolis transfer was about $250.

The bride was given away by her brother, Hjalmer Larson, chief draughtsman for the Spokane International system. Mrs. Corbin is of Swedish type of beauty and has light hair and pale blue eyes. She is a brilliant conversationalist and speaks English with scarcely any accent. She is also conversant with the German language. She is a member of the Swedish Lutheran church.

Corbin is president of the Spokane International Railway Co., whose line he built after selling the Spokane Falls & Northern railway to the Great Northern Railway Co. His brother was Austin Corbin, of New York. He occupies a picturesque manor on Seventh avenue, where the bride has everything to gratify her wishes.
