EXILE. BUT A CAPITALIST

Banishment to Siberia Has Proved Profitable to at Least One Subject of the Ozar.

How a political exile lives in Siberia is shown in M. B. Price's book, "Siberia." Mr. Price encountered this exile at Minusinsk. He and his famfly lived in a large house and his actual punishment seems to consist of a certain social ostracism consequent upon banishment from the great centers of Russian life: "When I went" to call upon him he came to the door himself, and showing me in through a room where he and his wife had been having their evening meal, ushered me into a room beyond. I noticed his calm, philosophical face as that of a man who had evidently endured mental strain with stoical fortitude; but his wife, more nervous than he, showed signs of former anxiety. It seemed strange indeed that I should be sitting in company with two members of high Russian society, now ostricised by exile to Siberia, and stranger still to partak of their intelligent conversation on topics of human interest. "First of all I was interested to know what sort of restrictions were placed upon the exile's liberty. found that he was not allowed to leave the district in which he resided, and that every week he had to sign his name in a book kept at the house of the chief 'Nachalink.' With that exception his life was free. He had money and he could live as he liked and go where he wished within that district, but he was continually watched by spies, who dogged his footsteps wherever he went. I was surprised to find that he, too, had caught the fever of modern commercialism, which is beginning to run throughout Siberia. quired gold concessions on the Mongolian frontier and was hoping to find capital to float a syndicate for working them next year. This was not at all my idea of the life of a Siberian exile. Instead of being made to work himself in the galleries of the gold mines till death released him from his chains, the exile now floats mining syndicates."

by Winds. the ravages of the red spider, E. E. Munger of Yuca City, Cal., used sticky fly paper to catch the insects, which tances by the wind. The results test he placed a sheet of sticky fly paper on a post 20 feet from an infested tree. In 24 hours the paper was covered with red spiders. The next test was made with the paper 12 feet from the ground and 100 feet from the tree. The results were the same. Later 16 sheets of fly paper were tacked to a fruit-drying tray and mounted on top of a stepladder which that no insects could crawl on to the trap. This was placed 650 feet from the orchard, and the next day spiders were found in abundance. It has been known for some time that the insects that infest orchards might be transmitted from one tree to another by the wind, but proof was not at hand before to show that the insects could be carried such a distance as this.-Popular Electricity and the
