

NEWSPAPER CHAFF.

Every rose has its thorn.
Every honey bee its sting;
But look at the blame mosquito.
He doesn't produce a thing.

—Kansas City Times.

The teacher was telling her scholars the mythological story about the man, who first turned into a swan.
"First," she said, "wings began to appear, and then feathers, and finally his neck grew longer and longer. Now who can tell me what he became?"
"A rubberneck!" was the startling reply.—Lippincott's.

The late Barney Owens of Point Greens, N. J., was a David Harnum type of character. This noted and successful horseman had a way of saying wise things with a seasoning of homey humor.

To a conceited man who had failed egregiously in life, Owens said one day at Point Greens:

"Well, Bill, you and I know how it is with some men. They're so busy blowing their own horns that they can never hear the factory whistle coaxing them to come to work."—Exchange.

Chancellor James C. Day of Syracuse university, is noted among the students for his brilliant, if somewhat caustic, epigrams.

"I once attempted to defend a certain action before the chancellor," said the Syracusean, "and I know that my defense was feeble. The chancellor listened to me with a bitter smile, and when I reached my lame conclusion he said:

"Your defense is rather an attack. In your attempt to praise you condemn. Suppose that I wished to dilute on the value of advertising. Would I say:

"Who says that publicity doesn't pay? A burglar overhauled $500 in a drawer and the paper mentioned the fact. The thief returned the next night, and not only secured the $500, but a silver watch as well."—Los Angeles Press.

It was the habit of the late Richard Henry Stoddard, the poet, to always speak well of everyone. No matter how bad the character of a person, the good gray poet invariably found some trait to praise. One day in his office on Park row, some friend entered and asked him whether he knew so and so, and if so, what was the man's reputation. It happened that the man had a shady reputation, and was well known as a "gold brick" operator. The aged poet lighted his pipe and answered: "Yes, I know him. He is the most energetic, progressive, irrepressible, good-natured, artistic kind of an unmitigated rascal that I ever met."—Kansas City Star.

"Why don't you make a speech that will tell your constituents exactly what you think about this question?"

"Because," answered Senator Sorensen, "I don't know exactly what I think, and if I did know, I don't know that I would want my constituents to know it."—Washington Star.

"Look, mamma," said small Dorothy, "there's a hole in my stocking as big as a dollar." "Oh, it is quite that large, dear," rejoined her mother. "Well," continued Dorothy, "it's as big as ninety cents, anyway."—Kansas City Star.

He was a very nice young man, and was sitting up in the highest style of his art in the car and recorded with evident admiration a pair of very good, very trimly dressed, and very new trousers, which he pulled up carefully at the knees to prevent any tendency to bursting.

The car rattled and clattered along and all the passengers gazed into his vacant vacancy, like all train-car passengers do. Finally a fair maiden, who sat opposite the young man, saw something and giggled, after the fashion of her kind. Then she looked at the nice young man and giggled again, then she nudged her fair companion, and the fair companion gazed across the car, looked at the young man and giggled.

All this annoyed the nice young man, who had been looking very wise and when two or three other passengers joined in the chorus he began to wriggle and ceased to look wise. The laughing increased and grew, and spread, and the nice young man grew desperate. He got up to see what it was over his head that caused the unbecomingly excruciating. He found it was one of those big cardboard advertisements that adorn the train-cars and it said:

"The young man sitting beneath this card is one of our customers. He is very busy and hard to please, but, my! isn't he an elegant dresser! He has on a pair of our $4 trousers."—Kansas City Journal.

his autobiography a story about a famous novelist.

"This novelist loves praise when he is sure of its sincerity. Sincere praise indeed is dearer to him than untold gold. And sometimes, in the hope of getting a little of it, he hides his identity and talks to people in book stores and libraries about his own works.

"One day he went into Brentano's to get some novels for summer reading. The salesman, who didn't know him, after bringing forth Howell's latest, and Conrad's, and Tarkington's and George Moore's, threw down one of the man's own books.

"Will you try this, sir?"

"The novelist eager for praise threw up his hands before his own book, exclaiming:

"Dear me! I can't stand that man's stuff."

"Can't you, sir?" said the salesman. "Well, to tell the truth, I can't either."—Exchange.

A certain professor was giving his pupils a lecture on "Scotland and the Scots." "These hardy men," he said, "think nothing of swimming across the Tay three times every morning before breakfast."

Suddenly, a loud burst of laughter came from the center of the hall, and the professor, amazed at the idea of any one daring to interrupt him in the middle of his lecture, angrily asked the offender what he meant by such conduct.

"I was just thinking," replied the lad, "that the poor Scotch clergymen would find themselves on the wrong side for their clothes, when they land, side for their clothes, when they land."—Lippincott's.

During the South African war, 100,000 men were sent home by British soldiers to pass through the hands of a censor. A certain private had sent four or five letters home, and patients had been obliterated by the censor and were therefore illiterate on their arrival at their destination. He decided to even accounts with the censor, and at the foot of the next letter he wrote:

"Please look under the stamp."

At the censor's office the letter was opened and read as usual. The officer in charge spent some time in counting the stamp from the envelope, but his feelings can be better imagined than described when he read these words:

"Was it hard to get out?—Exchange.

Unpleasant Evidence.

The constable is an observed man and his observation had its reward at Marlborough street one morning. It was the case of a gentleman driver who had run into a four-wheeler, and the constable, understanding in the witness box that the lady in question was drunk, said: "There was a bit of a bump," said the driver, "and this constable didn't feel as much. You was a big doubtful about me being drunk, wasn't you now?" continued the driver solemnly. "I was, just a bit," said the constable stolidly, "until I saw you taking down your own number on your coat sleeve."—London Standard.

Artist's friend—My dear Harold, I like your picture very much, only I fancy the original doesn't look quite so red as you have painted him. He hasn't a ruddy complexion; quite the reverse. Impressionist Artist—Who on earth are you talking about? Artist's friend—Why, your uncle, of course. Impressionist Artist—Gracious, man, but that isn't my uncle. It's a smudge!

Exposition.

Blanks—Johnny, what is better for me from me. Do you think he is good for that amount? Blanks—Yes, with proper securities.

"What securities might you suggest?"

"A check, and perhaps a pair of handcuffs and a dog. That would be enough to hold him."—London Mail.

Sermonist.

The Professor—Sir, suppose you had been called to see a patient with hysterics, some one, for instance, who had started laughing and found it impossible to stop, what would you do? Doctor—Zupante his funny bone.—Illustrated Bits.

An Expert Opinion.

"What do you think of my daughter's execution on the piano?"

"Good name for it, for she certainly does murder the time."—Baltimore American.

An Awful Cough Cured.

"Two years ago our little girl had a touch of pneumonia which left her with an awful cough. She had spells of coughing just like one with the whooping-cough and some thought she would not get well at all. We got a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which acted like a charm. She stopped coughing and got stout and fat," writes Mrs. Ora Bussard, Brubaker, Ill. This remedy is for sale by F. J. Ramsey, W. B. Frame, Ardmore Drug Co., Bonner & Bonner.
