WONDERS OF SCIENCE

The knowledge that a medical procedure has contributed little or nothing to the relief of disease is a sad condition of the scientific method. California, Florida, Alabama, and Georgia have been the scene of 250 square miles of skin healing has occurred. Instead of the usual grafting of skin taken from the arm of a friend, friends began to look at skin they removed from the donor. The skin was used to cover the injured skin and with success. It is reported that the results are better under the eye skin in a very satisfactory manner.

This practice of using eye skin has become universal and takes the place of the grafting on of human skin. And yet, we have the surgeons who will not be too precipitate about adopting it.

We should at least like for them to wait for the latest returns from Alabama, and be quite sure that a new method does not result. These are some people who think about their looks that they would rather not have any skin at all than go around covered with feathers.

Layman's Praise

A well-known presiding elder tells a good story at his own expense. He was asked one day to preach at a colored church where a money raising occasion had been announced, and the pastor of the church, desiring to impress the congregation with the importance and dignity of the speaker of the day, thus introduced him: "Brethren and sisters, it is now my great pleasure and delight to introduce the Rev. Mr. Blank, the sounding brass and de tinkling cymbal of the Methodist church." When a fellow-pastor addressed the same congregation some months later he was introduced as "the great obstacle of the Methodist church."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Henry Irving's Stage Revolution

Sir Henry Irving was the first actor to make slenderness acceptable, or tolerable, on the English stage. Until his time fatness had been obligatory; it is difficult to realize now the full convention of chest and shoulders and calves. Comparatively lately a sort of stage experience was urged with a company of English amateurs that all the thin women and all the lean men should be made plump. "Nothing," he said, "is so impossible on the stage as 'thinness.' Irving changed all this because his audience was used to unconpromisingly fat men."

FEEDS AND FEEDING

The secret of successful stock-raising or fattening is cheap feeds and proper feeding. Every farmer is surrounded by the question of what to feed, and not only of what to feed but how much to feed, how to feed and when to feed. The answer is these questions differ somewhat in different localities, but the general principles of feeding are the same whether the feed is grown and cured or fed.

We must aim to grow our own feeds as the man that produces milk for the cheese factory or creamery has not effort to make a practice of buying feed. He may, however, make exceptions to this rule in times of scarcity or he may occasionally find it profitable to buy feeds of a different character to help balance what might otherwise be a one-sided ration. The constantly increasing demands of those who furnish milk for the city trade and who have little or no land on which to grow their feeds are taking the by-products of the milk at prices beyond the reach of those who feed for butter or cheese.

It is often said that if a man can make a profit above the market price on the material that he grows on his own farm by feeding it to his live stock he ought then to be able to make a profit on the feed that can be bought in the market at the same price. This may seem like a logical conclusion, but it is one of the theories that do not always work out satisfactorily in practice. The man who buys his feed is at the mercy of a fluctuating market. He comes into competition with the man who gets six cents per quart for their milk. He is forced while getting protein for his cows in the by-products of the milk, to bid against the man who put up breakfast food at ten cents a pound. When we grow our own feed a much more economical employment of labor can be made as the labor required for milking morning and night can be used during the day to grow and care for this feed. All trunks and commissions are cut out. Growing one's feed on the farm is good farming, while buying feed is too much like hand-to-mouth farming.

It seems unfortunate that the humble bee, which is so useful, if not, indeed, absolutely necessary in the fertilization of red clover is not more carefully protected. When a nest of humble bees is overturned with the plow, the practice is almost universal of rubbing these of their honey, which probably means their destruction because of waste of food. The aim should be to foster in every legitimate way the presence of such an insect. It has been proved beyond a doubt that unless red clover is fertilized through the medium of insects, it will not bear seed. It is unfortunate that the common honey bee is unable to serve this purpose.

EVERGREENS IN SOUTHWESTERN NEBRASKA

A correspondent from southwestern Nebraska writes:

"I expect to set out some evergreens for a windbreak. Scotch pines grow the fastest. Would it pay to plant red cedar five feet apart and cut out every other one when they get big enough for posts? The place I want to grow them is about forty feet wide and between some fruit trees set out last spring and a walnut grove fifteen to twenty feet high. How close to the fruit trees would you set the evergreens?"

We would keep twenty or twenty five feet away from the fruit trees and would not put them on the north side of the orchard. The south or east side of the orchard would probably do no harm. Red cedar are also growers. There are two varieties of red cedar trees in Nebraska. One of them came in from the east and out from the west. The eastern variety will grow faster than the western and is better adapted to the climate. For post timber the red cedar would be the best by far. For windbreaks the Scotch pine would be the best. Spring is the best time to plant.

There are always people to suggest that disaster is coming to any branch of business they do not like. There are some folks who cannot bear to look a sheep in the face who think the boom has been too big to last. That is true, but there is more meat than consumed in this country this year than last, and there will be a demand for more next year than this. Then too, we should produce a surplus to send abroad.

JAPANESE MORNING GLORY

A writer on horticulture recommends the Japanese morning glory as a winter vine for winter blooming. If I can be successfully grown indoors what a charming window decoration it must make, with its unique foliage and brilliant flowers! We once planted some seeds of the common morning glory in a hanging basket, training the young vines up the cords by which the basket was suspended. They were in bloom at Christmas and were beautiful against both flowers and foliage. We got more than half as large as a vine grown out of doors.

The Owens Addition

JOINS Tulsa on the west, four to eight blocks from Main street. It is two blocks wide and extends from Grand View through to Brady Heights, including most of the old Owens home orchard and vineyard, as well as the show grounds further north. Every lot here is smooth and gently rolling, making splendid residence property at moderate cost. The streets and alleys are staked and plainly marked with plow. Streets are sixty feet and alleys fifteen feet wide. Every full lot is fifty feet front by 135 feet deep to alley. Perfect title is given—warranty deed and full abstract for each lot sold. The price of these lots is $2 to $6 per front foot, according to location. At this moderate price it is cheaper to buy and build than continue paying rent, especially as this property is within easy walking distance of every part of the city.

Hindoo's Point Well Taken

A Christian Brahmin was presenting the gospel in the Decon, when a Hindu in the congregation began vehemently to contradict. In good official fashion the sermon was immediately suspended, and the disputants retired to a kitchen to settle the point at their leisure. The substance of the debate was this: "You declare the good God to be infinite," said the Hindoo. "Yes," "What is the meaning of infinite?" "It means limitless." "And what part of speech is good?" "Good is an adjective," and what is the grammatical function of an adjective?" "To limit a noun." "How, then, do you apply an adjective to God, calling him good, and thus limiting the limitless?"

Barley as Food

In reply to an inquiry as to the digestible qualities of barley an exchange writes: "Barley is rich in nitrogenous substances, and contains large quantities of iron and phosphoric salts. Weight for weight, both barley and rye contain quite as much nutritive material as wheat, but it is a less digestible form, and the sour of both causes makes a compact bread which is indigestible. A report of Digestion says, the whole-barley Press. When cooked whole it was for a long time it is easily digested and nutritious, and there is a breakfast food made of barley which is nutritious, easy of digestion and very palatable."

Dog Cured Cancer

A worthy woman whose veracity is not questioned, told me yesterday that her uncle was cured of cancer by letting a faithful dog lick the malignant cutaneous scirrhous. The carcinoma was the result of a gunshot wound in the leg. Her belief is that the cure killed the dog, but as the brute was 16 years old it is likely that he had reached the limit of his days. This case is slightly different from that of the poor beggar Lazarus. "The dogs came and licked his sores, and it came to pass that the beggar died." So St. Luke tells us.—New York Press.

Earliest Theatre

What was probably one of the earliest theatres built was the Theatre of Dionysos, which was begun five centuries before Christ. The seating capacity of this remarkable building is said to have been 30,000, nearly four times that of our largest amusement palace. The Theatre of Dionysos was erected when Greek art and literature were in their prime. Here were presented to appreciated spectators the wonderful works of Aeschylus, Sophocles and Euripides.
