Broadway Jones.

At the beginning of the play "Broadnay Jones" has wroandered an bumense fortune in an endeaver to harn up Broadway. Just as he thinks he has accomplished his desire the in-Critable smuch comes, and the youth finds himself penniless and heavily in debt. In his desperation he consents to marry an heirest old enough to be his mother, but before the event can take place and obliging uncle dies and leaves him a chewing gum factory in Jenesville, Conn. To further increase his good fortune the chewing cum trust offers to buy out his cheming gum factory for a handsome sum Jones is about to accept their offer when the girl arrives on the scene, and through her influence he is not only induced to retain his property. but becomes the active head of his factory and a respected and honored man in his native city of Jonesville day offers the second of its pirate Of course he marries the girl at the end of the play. This, in a nutshell, is the story around which Mr. Cohan has built his comedy, and the play is conceded to be one of the best ever seen in New York.
