

"BACHELORS' INN" FOR TIMID MEN OF TULSA

Those Seeking to be Safe from the Attacks of the Fair Sex Are at Last to Have Real Home.

LEE DANIEL TO BUILD IT

Apartment House, Which Will be Built on South Main, is Patterned After Models in Dallas.

Bachelors find a cozy home for the unattached gentlemen of Tulsa and a fortification into which the lady's every-where demands may retreat and find shelter for protection against the attacks of maid and the fair sex.

That is what the bachelors' apartment building to be built on 119 1/2 South Main by Lee Daniel, will have when they move in.

Daniel announced yesterday that when the new apartment building begins the next fall. The permit was taken out immediately following success of the Spanish water bond election and the building says Daniel, is to cost in the neighborhood of $40,000.

It is to be three stories in height with two storeys and a basement, 48 rooms in all will be for living quarters of the occupants. The rooms will be fitted out in a double or single, that is, the apartment for admission may rent two rooms of one room and a bath. Each pair of rooms will be separated by a bath room containing shower and tub accommodations. Daniel estimates that the building will be completed within three months.

Daniel got his idea from Dallas, Texas where a similar apartment is operated for the benefit of bachelors. He states that in all probability he will employ a matronly man to take complete charge of the building, receive all applications for admission and attend to the wants of the occupants.

Although the apartment is to be operated somewhat under the supervision there will be no organization of this nature, the "happy family" environment being preferred. All applicants will be required to show credentials before being listed for admission but members of the American Legion will be accorded preference since their membership in Joe Carson post will serve as credentials says Daniel.

Daniel has already named the building "Bachelors' Inn" and it is pointed out that Tulsa has long been of just such an institution where rents may be moderate and the men folk who are bashful can live in safety.

"Big Jim, the Cop," Is Now Mr. Pilkington, the Oil Man

"When a man gets so that he doesn't want to carry a gun or even look inside of the police station, it's time for him to give up his job as a policeman, that's the way I felt and that's the reason I quit," said "Big Jim" Pilkington, for seven years a member of the police force and for one year captain of the traffic force, who resigned last week to go to business.

"Big Jim," over six feet in height and weighing over 250 pounds, was a familiar figure at the corner of Third and Main streets, where he directed traffic for four years. Daily he related all men as they passed by in their cars, until he came to know perhaps more people than any other man in town, and was known to them.

"I got tired of arresting people nearly two years ago," he said, "first I quit carrying a gun. I didn't need it any more and I didn't want to take it around with me anyway. Then I quit liking to arrest people. The thrill of pointing to my badge and pushing a man down to the ground passing away with the desire to carry a gun. The police station no longer held any charms for me or attracted me. Even the old No. 13 judge that I had sworn every since I joined the force began to lose its gleam and its significance for me and I decided that as a policeman my usefulness as a cop was about ended."

Now in Oil Business. "I knew every man who drove by the corner of Third and Main in a car, speaking to them as they came down to their offices in the morning and again when they started home in the evening. I knew them all so well and never having had any trouble in my life with an oil man, I thought of trying to get in business with them and know them better. If a man could handle people well enough not to have to arrest them as a policeman, he ought to be able to sell them something, so standing on the corner when a man who buys a few thousand gallons of oil and gasoline a day drove by with his usual nod, I made up my mind to wave a bill of sale in their faces instead of blowing a whistle at them. That's the way I got in the oil business."

It's no trouble to sell oil and gasoline when you know everybody. I've known the men I deal with ever since I started in on the force seven years ago. The number of people I have become acquainted with puts me right where I can talk business with them without having to explain who I am and what I want. I have been selling oil for only two days, but have taken orders for nearly 24,000 gallons of gasoline in that short time.

Then he pulled out a slab of cardboard and handed it over, whereon was printed "Lindner Oil company, Jim Pilkington, salesman."

He looks different. Minus his uniform, he looked different and was different. He was no longer "Big Jim, the cop," but Mr. James Pilkington, the salesman. He was no longer waving his hand for a car to pass on or to stop, and instead of a whistle in his hand he carried a pile of order books, set to bring the dollars instead of the men.

ready to keep cars running instead of stopping them. "It's a better life and just as exciting," he said, "I get more ideas out of putting over a deal than I ever did out of catching an argumentative drunk on the head. From now on it's me for business."

"Big Jim" started in on the police force in Tulsa in 1911, staying there a year before he left for camping to work a year on the police force there. Then he returned to Tulsa as sergeant of police and held down that job for four years, until he was made captain of the traffic squad. Last summer he went into the service and was assigned with the military police at Camp Logan, Houston, Texas, for six months, getting his discharge last in January. On February 1, he came back to his old job as captain of the traffic squad but he left the job for the time and he was ready to quit. He stuck it out however, until July 4, when he announced his intention of resigning, giving up the old badge No. 13 last Tuesday.

TULSA NEGRO BOOSTERS TO MOTOR TO KANSAS

Colored men and women of Tulsa are completing arrangements for the colored booster trip to the fifteenth annual convention of the Western Negro Press association to be held in Kansas City, Mo., July 25 and 26, and according to A. J. Smither, president of the association and editor of the Tulsa Star, about 25 motor cars of boosters from all parts of the state will leave here Tuesday on the trip-state trip through Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri.

An elaborate reception at the convention hall is being planned for the booster party when they arrive here Monday. After a parade through the city, headed by Tulsa's colored soldier boys, the party will be entertained at convention hall that night. At the conclusion of the speaking program, the remainder of the evening will be devoted to dancing.

The party will leave Tulsa at an early hour Tuesday. They will go to Kansas City by way of Winfield, Wichita, Newton and Topeka.

Opens Land For Settlement. WASHINGTON, July 15.—Secretary Lane has signed an order opening to purchase and settlement the Yuma mesa, Arizona, auxiliary reclamation project, under which 11,000 acres of land, said to be treeless, immediately are made available, and through which eventually 45,000 acres will be brought under irrigation. Bids will be accepted in November for the sale of tracts by the government. Arizona representatives in congress attended the ceremonies incident to the signing.

CITY EMPLOYEES ARE GRANTED MORE PAY

City Engineering Department Given Increases in Order to Retain Those Now Employed.

City employees in practically every department of the administration were given substantial increases in salaries yesterday by the mayor and the board of city commissioners.

Salaries in the city engineering department were increased from $11,565 to $12,775 a month. City engineer H. H. Wynn recommending the increase as he found it practically impossible to obtain good men at the salaries offered by the city, in view of the high money paid for draftsmen and engineers by the local oil companies.

The salary of the chief of the fire department was raised to $250 a month from $222, while salaries of other fire officials were raised as follows: assistant chief from $150 to $165; machinists from $150 to $165; superintendent of fire alarm from $140 to $155; and firefighters from $110 to $125.

The salary of J. E. Warren, judge of the municipal court, and that of John Ward, city attorney, were fixed at $2,000 a year with the provision that both men may engage in private practice as long as their private business does not interfere with municipal affairs. Both officials are entitled to a salary of $2,000, but asked that $2,000 be fixed and they be allowed to attend to other business. Planning inspector W. L. Devery was given a salary increase of $15 a month making his monthly salary $299, the same amount paid inspectors in other city departments.

Mrs. Ignette Monahan, secretary and stenographer in the city attorney's office, was given a raise from $120 to $130 a month on recommendation of City Attorney Marshall.
