Little Ones with Oil and Lights It.

Pittsburg, Kan., Nov. 13.—Marie Berthune, wife of ane of the victims of the mine disaster, set firs to herself and five children, and all but the eldest daughter were burned to death. Among the bodies recovered from the fatal shaft was that of Louis Berthune, and when his wife recognized the mangled romains a shriek was heard and the grief-stricken woman had swooned. When she recovered she refused to speak or notice any one, and it was evident that her reason had gone. As she evinced no disposition to become violent, little attention was paid to her, and all day long she sat at her door, regardless of the cries of her five children, the youngest a babe of 5 months old.

Late in the evening she apparently roused from her stuper, and took her children to the improvised morgue, where lay the body of her husband. She led each child up to the ghastly carpse, and still with that awful silence which had marked her from the beginning of her bereavement, led them away to the little but which had sheltered them in the past.

giming of her beravement, led them away to the little hut which had sheltered them in the past.

No attention was paid to her by those whe were busy with the dead and dying, but about midnight a cry of fire from the village of Frontenac gathered a crowd of workers from the mine to the streets. It was seen that the Berthune cabin was in flames, and willing hands were soon at work to save the inmates. The oldest child, a girl of 9 years, succeeded in escaping from the fire, which devoured the rest of the family, and her story was one that sent a thrill of horror through her hearers. Shesaid that her mother, sent each of the children to bed with a kiss, and then sat down near the stove.

The girl could not sleep and lay watching her mother, who, after sitting for some time, took the can of coal oil and poured it over horself and the bed ciothes of the children. The grief stricken woman then set fire to some paper and scattered it about the room, and soon the whole place was in flames. The daughter struggled a short time with her mother in an endeavor to get away, but the burning oil on her mother's clothes caused such intense heat that she soon relaxed her grasp. The girl finally managed to get out of the door, where she fell exhausted and frightfully burned. The cabin burned like tinder, and soon nothing was left but the glowing embers from which were raked the charred bodies of the insane mother and her four children.
