A Big Chicage Hotel Sold.
CBICAGO, Feb. 10.—It is reported that s deal has been quietly concluded on the part of Mr. Leiter, formerly of the firm of Field, Leiter & Co., whereby, for the sum of $400,000,000, he has secured possession of the Grand Pacific hotel. The deal, it is understood, only included a building and leashold, as Mr. Leiter aiready owns the ground on which the building stands. Mr. Leiter will have the hotel torn down and erect in its stand an office building. Landlord John B. Drake, of the Grand Pacific, in an interview said: "Our lease on the Grand Pacific runs until 1895. No matter who buys the building or any part of it, and no matter who owns the ground on which this building stands, our lease is good for five yearsmore, of that we are sure, and as long as the hotel makes money the way it does now there is going to be no 'tearing down' until our lease expires."

Bowen Hests "Johnson."

New Obleans, Feb. 10.—Andy Bowen, the local lightweight, and Charley Johnson, of Minneapolis, fought to a draw with skin tight gioves at Abits Springs for a purse of $100 and gate receipts. The fight lasted 3 hours and 12 minutes, both men being badly punished. The arrival of the excursion train for the city put an end to the affair. Bowen's manager, who was also stake holder, awarded the purse to Bowen, and the gate receipts, which amounted only to $10, were equally divided between the two men. Johnson, it is claimed by some, is a well known northwestern lightweight, and by others that he is Jinmy Collins, of $1, Louis, who is wanted in connection with the barge fight there in which one of the fighters was killed.

LIFE IN THE STEERAGE.

HOW A YOUNG ENGLISHMAN WAGER-ED AND LOST A BET.

Bunking in with the Emigrants-Uninvis ing Surroundings-Some of the Noises, Smells and Other Discomforts the Steerage Affords.

"My dear chap, you'll never do it. I'll wager you a fiver you don't."
Such was the emphatic consolation vouch-saved to me by my old college chum when I confided to him my intention of crossing the Atlantic like an ordinary emigrant in the confided to him my intention of crossing the Atlantic like an ordinary emigrant in the steerage.

How very like a friend! You pride yourself on being a stoic. Does be credit met Not he! With brutal cynicism he laughs your pretty conceit to scorn and denounces you to your face as a rank egicurean.

"Weil," I cried easily, though not a little mortified, "I'll take you, if only to punish you for your skepticism by collaring your £5."

I may here explain that I was crossing from merry England to the Unime States on pleasure bent, and the idea of Eaveling in the steerage pleased my fancy as being a novel and I flattered myself a somewhat plucky experiment. "Nothing like seeing life in all its varied phases," said I to myself.

A week later saw me at Liverpool. There was hurrying to and fro and trampling of heavy feet. Porters skurried 'hither and thither, bearing huge bales and "all sorts and conditions" of merchandiae. Hoarse shouts rent the air and there was much jostling and more profanity, and little respect was paid unto the corns of man. But as I cast my eyes along the approach which led to the stage they alighted on a procession which flooded my soul with the most dismal foreboding. A nondescript moving mass—which to call a wagon were to flatter it preposterously—compared seemingly of a heterogeneous collection of bundles with kere and there a projection which somewhat resembled a box, was advancing cautiously in our direction. By the side of it marched a number of persons who might have been moving advertisements for a faded rag shop. They were indeed the sorriest crew I had ever set eyes on. Could this be the company I was to enjoy intinancy with for the next ten days' Alasi my apprehensions were but to well founded. For the first time I felt a pang for my £5 note.

The city clocks now announced that it was 10.50 and with that all of us were speedly.

Ansai any appearance for the first time I felt a pang for my £5 note. The city clocks now announced that it was 10:50 and with that all of us were speedily shipped aboard the tender. We seen hove alongside that gallantship, the Crafty, which was to be our home—or our coffin, for aught we know—on the wide, wide sea. At 2 o'clock the medical officer came aboard and held a levee, attended by all the crew and all the emigrants. We all filed by him in solemn procession. Now and then there would come a halt, while a man or woman, whose appearance suggested some lurkish disease, would be subjected to rigorous examination.

would come a nall, while a man or woman, whose appearance will a man or woman, whose appearance was greated some lurkish disease, would be subjected to rigorous examination.

By and by things began to assume a more settled aspect and to indicate that the hour of our departure was nigh at hand. Presently the saloon passengers arrived alongside, and with them an army of friends, who accompanied them to their cabins. No sooner had they arrived there, however, than the bell rang and they came forth again like a rushing torrent and streamed into the tender. A waving of handkerchiefs, a crying of "good-by," the welling of tears to tender yees, a little huskiness of the throat and their adieus were said.

The bar was safely passed late at night, and as we stood away from land we got clear of the fog and the Crafty was enabled to forge ahead rapidly.

On the morrow we glided into Queenstown harbor, which some mariners claim to be the finest natural harbor in the world. Bumboat women here boarded us and until we weighed anchor often became a thing of misery by reason of their persistent attention. Once at sea one's lungs expanded more freely. It was at this period that I first began to study my follow passengers. The respectable folk of the steerage numbered about twenty or thirty, and these were English, harerican and Scandinavian. All belonged to the poorer class but were cleanly and neat in appearance and of orderly behavior.

A marked contrast was afforded by the other emigrants. For the most part their personal aspect suggested the idea that the wells of their country had run dry and that soap was an offense to their nostrils. Animalism was stamped on each man's face, and there was scare an intelligent creature among them. A certain concession in my favor was made by the steamship company. Instead of being berthed forward with the single men, I was allotted a cabin aft such as its given to every enigrant married couple. This indeed was a liberal concession, for the single wretches were emigrants for ountry had been able. The single women endured a like state of things. The married couples were thus well off in comparison.

All went well for a day or two, The meals served were plain, but the food was good, and there was an abundance of it.

maintain her equilibrium and began to stir "with a short, uneasy motion." This set me thinking that it was advisable to prepare for all contingencies, and so I betook me to my bunk, and there I remained a night and a day. The cabin opposite to mine was occupied by a patriarch who might have sat for Moses. With him was his family. Nor I doubt not that they were an agreeable family, but they developed a habit of moaning in unison which was not altogether pleasurable to my unmusical ears. Then my next door neighbors were a family and rejoiced in twins of stentorian lungs. One might have judged that it was the life long object of this pair to sustain a continuous bowl. Each seemed to vie with the other as to which could reach the highest note, and they would sing it out most triumphantly. Doubtless the parents had much reason to lay their hand on their offspring and—bless them, but my own savage breast would not be charmed by their duet.

Many other harrowing sounds, too, were borne in on my ears, which made me regret my accute hearing and served to undermine my resolution to stick to the steerage. But I said in my strength, "I will remain where I am." Vain is the word of man! I had hardly made this mental ejaculation ere the last straw was laid on and the camel's back broke.

There had already been a curious odor of hat straw was liad on and the camers back-broke.

There had already been a curious odor of oil floating about, but now the pitching and tossing of the vessel caused a condition of things from which there spring a most evil effluvis. It was a sort of effluvin that besieged the nostrils and clung to them even when you rushed far from its domain. It was an effluvia that might be felt. All too soon I became aware of it. It was too much. Moved by a sudden impulse, I crept from my bunk. A few bounds took me to the deek and the purser's cabin, and the next minute I was transformed into a saloon passenger,—W. B. C. in Kansas City Times.

GARRICK AND DIBDIN.

The Former Knew the Value of Money and Did Disagreeable Things. In 1708 Dibdin transferred his services to Drury Lane, where he had the usual disc greenents with Garrick in regard to money matters. One would hardly be justified in applying the term "unscrupulous" to Gar-rick; but he undoubtedly knew the value of Somely Cheeker. This removed how a conWaterman, 'he sold for two guineas; 'Nobling Like Grog,' for half a guinea, and so on. Thus, while he was alvays working hard, his existence for the greater part of his career was little better than the hand to mouth one of the third rate professional.

Garricis seems to have found him of signal service at the Stratford jubilee, as well as at Drury Lane, yet they do not appear to have at any time pulled well together. The young composer had become indebted to the actor to the extent of £50, and he tells us that Garrick made him shave at song writing for the Shakespeare celebration till 'the had better gone to a Jew for the money.' On one occasion the actor said to him apropos of his debt, 'Il can take down the pegs that make this music;' to which Didbin replied, "Yes, as honeed as you are."

At another time Garrick, having previously failed to satisfy Dibden with some verses for music, produced the words of the rondeau beginning, "Sisters of the tuneful strain," and asked Didbin if the piece would do. "Yes," was the reply, "it is tuned so musically that it sets itself. It is certainly the best you have ever written." The rondeau turned out to be by Jerningham, and if Dibdin was unaware of this fact he, at any rate, got credit for knowing it, for the famous actor never forgave him the honestly expressed opinion.

Garrick seems, indeed, to have been a tiresome taskimaster, and with ghe consciousness of superiority in his own line, at least, Dibdin must have falt intensely annoyed at the constant mutilations to which his literary and musical work was subjected by the manager. This, however, may have had its good effect, though not exactly in the direction intended by Garrick. Irritated beyond measure by the frequent "improvements" made on his productions, Dibdin resolved to rely on his memory only in composition, and never to put his work on apage until all alterations had been agreed upon. Feeling certain that Garrick "searcely knew one air from another, and that his critic

How to Sleep.

Up to the fifteenth year most young people require ten hours, and until the twentieth year nine hours. After that age every one finds out how much sleep lie or she requires, though, as a general rule, at least six to eight hours is necessary. Eight hours' sleep will prevent more nervous derangements in women than any medicine can cure. During growth there must be ample sleep if the brain is to develop to its full extent; and the more nervous, excitable or precocious a child is, the longer sleep should it get, if its intellectual progress is not to come to a premature standstill, or its life cut short at an early age.—The Analyst,

In all diseases of the nasal muccus membrane the remedy used must be non-irritating. The medical profession has been slow to learn this. Nothing satisfactory can be accomplished with douches, snuffs, powders or syringes because they are all irritating, do not thoroughly reach the affected surfaces and should be abandoned as worse than failures. A multitude of persons who had for years borne all the worry and pain that catarrh can inflict testify to radical cures wrought by Ely's Cream Balm.
