

A MATTER OF MILLIONS.

But Searles Forgot All About the Transactions.

HIS HOSTILITY TO TIM HOPKINS.

The Contestant's Attorneys Attempt to Show That This Emotion Caused Searles to Use Undue Influence in Getting His Wife to Disinherit Her Adopted Son.

SALEM, Mass., Sept. 25.—At the Searles will contest Mr. Searles resumed his seat on the witness stand. He was looking less buoyant than on the previous day. His face wore something of an anxious look, for counsel had been pressing him hard, and his voice was more subdued and hesitating.

Mr. Searles testified that the mansion at Great Barrington was deeded to him Feb. 28, 1888, although the deed had never been recorded.

Mr. Burley asked if the Hopkins palace in San Francisco was transferred to witness, and Searles replied that he had no recollection that the palace had ever passed out of her hands.

Mr. Burley remarked, "Well, I guess I can refresh your memory," and at once submitted a deed of the property in San Francisco, dated May 24, 1888, transferring it to the witness.

He Had Forgotten It.

"I had forgotten that deed," said Mr. Searles. He then went on to say that he did not recall several deeds which were there produced. He remembered signing a lot of deeds and papers, but could not recall their contents.

Mr. Burley then asked witness if he knew that one of the transfers of property included the cemetery in which the remains of Mark Hopkins, Mrs. Searles' first husband, were interred. Searles replied that he did not.

He Had Forgotten It.

"Did you not," said Mr. Burley impressively, as he turned half around to look significantly at the judge, "did you not understand that the object of leaving the transactions unrecorded was for the purpose of keeping Timothy Hopkins and Mrs. Searles' kin in ignorance of the immense property that you were acquiring?"

"Certainly not," replied Mr. Searles quietly.

Then Mr. Burley whirled around and read the following telegram, which was sent by Mrs. Hopkins three days before the marriage was celebrated.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5, 1887.

DEAR SIR:—The marriage proposed and refused four years ago, consummated at 11 a. m. Nov. 5, if possible, let E. F. Searles and the bride receive your congratulations. I do not all before the 10th. M. HOPKINS.

The Undue Influence Charge.

Now they were getting to the point where there was to be revelations concerning Timothy Hopkins' opposition to the marriage. The point of undue influence hinges right here. It is admitted that Timothy opposed the marriage, and opposed it bitterly, and the claim is that Searles so resented this action of Timothy that he persuaded Mrs. Hopkins-Searles to disinherit the son. Under the searching questioning Mr. Searles went on to say he remembered to have heard his wife read a letter which she sent to Tim in which she said that she believed that Edward F. Searles and Stillman & Hubbard were his (Tim's) friends.

He had heard before his marriage to Mrs. Hopkins that Tim had detectives on his track. He did not like to learn such a fact, yet he entertained no ill feeling against Tim. He believed the story and subsequently had a talk with Timothy in the presence of the latter's foster mother. Tim stated he had never employed detectives in any capacity, but that he was anxious to ascertain the character of the man who was Timothy's mother. Searles told Tim that he had no objection for any one to fully investigate his character; in fact, deemed it perfectly proper for Tim to do so.

Hopkins Was Remembered.

A will of Mary F. Searles, dated Nov. 22, 1887, with a codicil dated June 16, 1888, was produced. Witness knew of the will but did not know of its contents until since his wife's death.

This will gave $10,000 to John Harwood, a former coachman, and the residue was left in trust to Edward F. Searles, Timothy Hopkins and Thomas E. Stillman, to be divided in equal shares to Edward F. Searles and Timothy Hopkins during their lifetime, and on their death to whomsoever they might designate by will. Witness had heard Mrs. Searles say that before her marriage she had made a will in which she had never told witness that she had promised her first husband to hold her entire property in trust for Timothy; nor that she had promised Timothy's own mother that if she would consent to the wedding he should have all her property; never heard Mrs. Searles say when she first saw her little granddaughter, "Here comes the little heir."

Indifference to Millions.

The sensation of the day was this witness' apparent indifference to the transfer of millions of property to him by his generous bride, and the fact that in lieu of the accommodating Mr. Stillman, and murmurs of surprise could be heard when he said that he had forgotten about the existence of the unrecorded deeds in his favor. It was only after a most searching questioning by Mr. Burley that he admitted that it was not his understanding, nor the understanding of Mrs. Searles, that the property should pass to him till the deeds were recorded.

An Element of Suspicion.

Another element of suspicion was that the deeds were all drawn while the parties were on their wedding tour in Europe by Mr. Stillman, and were signed and executed in a foreign country before an American consul. The only excuse offered for these acts of munificence was that Mr. Stillman, acting as Mrs. Searles' attorney, and in her personal interest, thought it advisable that she should convey all her property to her husband, who was Mr. Stillman's old confidential friend and his partner in the combination of experience and capital, in which the lawyers and intended husband furnished the experience and Mark Hopkins' the capital. All that she had to leave her heirs at her death, in now appears, was the experience contributed by her partner.

M'VEY AND THE POOLS.

DETECTIVES M'VEY, JONES AND VANDEGRIFT AT DOVER.

They Warn Gamblers and Pool-Sellers That They Must Quit Operations—A Big Surprise to the Management—The Gamblers Will Not Be Prosecuted.

ANY NUMBER OF POLITICIANS.

STAFF Correspondence. EVENING JOURNAL. DOVER, Sept. 24.—Ten thousand persons attended the Delaware State Fair to-day. It was the biggest day of the week, and persons flocked here from all directions. Twenty-three carloads of excursionists came here from the north on the regular excursion trains to stay nothing of the large number who came on the regular way and express trains.

Persons from the southern part of the state were not wanting, and it took fifteen cars beside the regular trains to contribute to the merry throng, and the day, with its brightness, was one of unalloyed enjoyment.

Mr. McVey From Wilmington.
When your correspondent reached the grounds, between 1 and 2 o'clock this afternoon, the pool sellers, wheel of fortune men, and those running many other games of chance were doing a thriving business, and many of the spectators as well as the unscrupulous, called "dropped" money in large amounts. Wherever you turned a game of chance stared you in the face and tempted your cupidity.

There were the pools where the better class of betters played, won and lost, according to the caprice. A few feet from them was the wheel of fortune, and around it were four large gambling tables. Hoarse cries of "Three to one on Saddle M." "Two to one on Instant" rang out from all sides beneath the pool tent. "Red" and "Black" were called out. "No more!" "Black wins!" could be heard breaking in every minute or two as the dazzling wheel of fortune was spun around and stopped again. "Star green; five to one on star green!" and away it spun again. "No takers." "No more star green," and the croupier raises in the shekels of the bettors on the black and the red. All this was in the grand stand enclosure.

Outside the enclosure the dice, hammering machine, swinging ball and other games of chance did a thriving business, and their gains were as heavy as the public losses.

Everything went as merry as a wedding bell until 2:10 o'clock. At that time State Detective McVey, accompanied by Detectives Jones and Vandegrift, went to Secretary Barnard and informed him that the gaming and pool-selling must stop. The secretary asked him by whom he was authorized. He was informed that it was by order of Attorney General John Biggs.

This information was a stunner to the management of the fair. The directors thought that it would be overlooked by the officers, and had guaranteed the gamblers protection. But the directors acted upon their percentage of the gain materially increasing the receipts of the association.

McVey was obdurate, and he and Secretary Barnard notified the men who were running the games, at a time must shut up shop or suffer the consequences, which were $500 fine and three years in prison. The gamblers were even more surprised than the directors, and parleyed for a few seconds. It was amusing to see big-hearted McVey break the bad news. He would walk up to a man, slap him familiarly on the back, and say:

"Old man, I am sorry to tell you so, but you must shut up your place. I know it is hard luck, but it cannot be helped. I am setting under orders."

The law dropped, the eyes dropped, the muttered curses dropped, and men began packing up. Twenty minutes after the word was given everything in the shape of a gambling device had disappeared, and the pool stalls, so lately teeming with life, formed good vantage ground for viewing the races.

The men who had been "dropping" money were loud in their condemnation of the attorney-general's course, and some even went so far as to advise the pool-sellers to defy the law. McVey had told them the law, and further than that he said:

"If you shut up now you will not be prosecuted, but if you do not, you will be given the law to its full extent."

"But," said one of the men, "the management guaranteed us immunity from the law."

"Well, all I have to say is this: The management of this or any other fair cannot guarantee to set aside the laws of the state."

This argument was conclusive and Detective McVey did not have to repeat it. The gamblers were very glad to get off so easily.

Politicians on the Field.
Plenty of politicians, but no politics, was the order of the day. Talk about it they would not. "This is an off-year, you know, and it is too early to talk."

That was the universal cry and seemed to be the universal condition. For an "off-year," however, the politicians were unusually numerous, and they were men of note.

First and foremost was ex-Secretary of State Thomas F. Bayard. He was accompanied by Senator George Freese and Private Secretary Charles McFee. They are in Dover before Judge of the Probate Court E. T. Cooper, engaged in defending the will of Colonel George W. Cunningham, late of Duck Creek hundred. Some of the relatives of the deceased financier and peach grower are attempting to upset the will on the grounds of an alleged unsound mind and undue influence dictating it. Senator Gray stated to your correspondent that nearly 200 witnesses of the contestants is in.

Ex-Secretary of State Bayard was more interested in horse-fish than in anything else. While Senator Gray was shaking hands with his many friends, Mr. Bayard and Congressman Causy went over to the stable to look at the celebrated trotting stallion, Harry Russell, belonging to E. B. Emory of Centerville, Md.

Governor Reynolds, in his tall, white hat and black boots, was a conspicuous figure as he moved around easily among the throng shaking hands with his many friends.

Not far away was ex-Governor Benjamin T. Biggs, with his tall black hat and flying white locks, and ex-Governor C. C. Stockley, who fought the good fight and won the office of register of wills of Sussex county, could be met almost anywhere within the grand stand enclosure.

The chair of secretary of state was also well represented. Hon. James L. Welcott, who was secretary of state under Hall's administration, was seated under the grounds, and was pointed out as the coming United States Senator to succeed Senator Anthony Higgins by John F. Sausbury, secretary of state under the Biggs administration, seated to be out of politics and head over heels in the interest of the fair. Secretary of State D. T. Marvel occupied a seat in the small grand stand, watched the pool selling and chatted pleasantly with Sussex county friends most of the afternoon.

The judiciary was represented by Judge Houston.

State Treasurer Burnitt had a complacent look on his face as he walked between the grand stand and the pool-sellers.

The legislative branch of the state government was represented by Senators Richardson and Moore, Representatives Ridgely, Chipman and West, and Clerks Hearn and Dunn. Senator Moore was one of the few men who came out winner in the pool department. Clerk Hearn said that the Senate journal will be ready for distribution in December.

The Frothocratic Pism.
B. B. Allen, the stalwart Democrat of Duck Creek hundred, stood near the entrance gate of the grand stand enclosure, with an office seeker's look on his face. He wants to succeed "Uncle Joe" Burchenal as prothonotary of Kent county. The office, a record of deeds, expires in about three weeks. There are only two candidates in the field—B. B. Allen of Smyrna and Stephen K. Betts of Milford. Mr. Betts has this advantage over Mr. Allen. Duck Creek hundred was represented in the county building by John H. Heston, a record of deeds. Milford hundred did not have a representative, and Stephen K. Betts took the field as a candidate for the office of prothonotary. Mr. Allen did not tell justified in asking for another place for Duck Creek hundred. This left Mr. Betts with a clear field. He made his while the sun shone. Recorder Bewley died. His successor came from another hundred. This left the field open for Mr. Allen. He entered the fight with the determination to win, notwithstanding his recent defeat for the state. The office, a record of deeds, has the support of Duck Creek, Lehigh Creek, Kenton, East Dover, West Dover and North Murderkill hundreds, with the partial support of several others, to say nothing of the other strong personal endorsement he has received. He is confident that the governor will appoint him.

Wilmington Politicians Here.
Among the Wilmington politicians noticed were Patrick Neary, Courtland Montgomery, candidate for recorder of deeds; John Callahan of the city tax office; Senator Anthony Higgins, with a fresh and rosy European look on his face, which he had, says a date of 40 per cent when he brought it into this country; United States Marshal Mahaffy, F. Eden Bach, and Woolley of the Sunday Star; Hugh Browne, the young Republican silver-tongued orator, who speaks so bewitchingly of "the gentle sphyx that blows the yellow, stricken orchards of Kent and Sussex counties, and sigh, 'Republican! Republican!'"

The Kent County Delegation.
Both parties were well represented from Kent county. The party of Jeffersonian simplicity was upheld by General R. R. Kenney, ex-Sheriff McDaniel, Colonel E. T. Cooper, Samuel Armatrong, W. A. C. Hardestie, William Sausbury, Superintendent Holiday, President of the Levy Court Thomas Reed, Horace Mustard, Clifton Williamson, Dr. Wilkinson, Robert W. Reynolds, Insurance Commissioner I. N. Fooks, John D. Hawkins, Sheriff Amos Cole, Colonel Robert Hill, and J. C. Pennewell, Jack Jones, and John H. Heston, H. C. Collison, Colonel E. P. Stacey.

Grandpa and his big hat were represented by District Attorney Baniah Watson, J. Colby Smith, Colonel D. P. Barnard, Harry A. Richardson, James Pennewell, George Fisher, A. L. Hudson, Henry Cannon, The Farmers Alliance was represented by Clerk of the Peace Cahall.

Few "Big Guns" From Sussex.
Besides those already named few of the prominent politicians of Sussex county were present. Among those noticed were: Colonel E. L. Martin, W. W. Rawlins, Receiver of Deeds J. J. Morris, W. B. Tomlinson, W. F. Records and Dr. Edward Fowler.

General Kenney Insulted.
Just after the races General R. R. Kenney was grossly insulted and roughly handled by a man who claimed to be a member of Spittell's police force. The general, in company with Dr. Edward Fowler, was coming out of the grand stand enclosure gate with the crowd. He was not walking fast, enough to suit the officer, who was, unlike the rest, in civilian dress. He caught General Kenney by the lapels of the coat and roughly pulled him through the gate. This was resented, a war of words ensued, and the general was again roughly handled. Complained to the management, but the man was spirited away by the sergeant of the force. The general and his friends are very indignant over such treatment.

An Air Ship Episode.
Professor Carl Meyer made an ascension in his air-ship this afternoon. He intended to go up and steer it around over the fair grounds. Unfortunately for him there was a small gale from the southeast, and he was carried up as far as Brenford, eight miles above Dover. The wind was entirely too strong for his propeller.

A Distressing Accident.
John Downes of Harrington, brakeman on the Delaware railroad, fell from an engine tank while shifting cars at the fair grounds yesterday, and had his leg fractured. Some time ago he had several fingers cut off. Dr. Ellegood reduced the fracture. He did not seem to have a very high regard for Harrington. He wanted to be sent to the hospital in Wilmington. His friends wanted to send him to Harrington. He positively refused to be taken there.

The New Baptist Church.
There is a movement on foot to erect a new Baptist Church here. The congregation is using fair privileges to further the project.
