POLITICAL

TO THE VOTERS OF DELAWARE:

Under the coercion of the Republican State and County Committees, all the nominees of the Independent Republican Party except Andrew C. Gray, nominee for Attorney General, have resigned from the tloket of said party. As a practical consequence of such action, Mr. Gray, upon the request of the State Committee of the Independent. Republican Party, has also resigned from the tloket of said party in New Castle County, it having been considered that it was preferable to have no ticket of said party appear upon the ballot in New Castle County after the enforced resignation of all the other State and County candidates.

Castle County after the enforced resignation of all the other State and County candidates.

The Independent Republican movement was originally intended solely to provide a means for effective opposition to the election of Frank Hall Davis, the Republican nomines for Attorney General, without weakening the general Republican vote. This intention was carried out in New Castle County, inasmuch as all the Republican nominees except Davis, appeared on the ticket filed in that county. The same was true, with minor exceptions, in Kent Gounty. In either county, the voters who felt compelled to vote against Davis could have done so without injury to the State ticket, and generally without injury to the county ticket.

We believe that the attempt on the part of the Republican managers to coerce the voters into the support of Davis contrary to their convictions is a serious mistake. With the Independent ticket in the field, no votes would have been lost to the party, either by reason of failures to properly out the regular ticket or by reason of Republican voters driven to the Democratic ticket.

We wish to counsel voters not to allow their natural resentment against the Republican management, on account of its treatment of Republican opponents of Davis, to influence them to vote against the Republican ticket generally. The just opposition to Davis can still be made effective by cutting his name from the regular Republican ticket.

Two courses are open to Republican voters who believe that Davis should not be elected; one is to vote the regular Republican ticket by crossing two lines in the square at the head of the ticket and to simply draw a line through Davis' name on the ballot, with the penell provided in each election booth. The other is to vote the regular Republican ticket as above, draw a line through Davis' name, and write over it in the same space the name of Andrew C. Gray, the other nomines for the office of Atterney General. For persons who wish to surely accomplish the desired result of defeating Davis, the latter course is more effective, inasmuch as it counts twice as much as the first method.

We believe that the good of the Republican Party and the public Interests of the State domand the defeat of Davis; that party loyalty is best demonstrated by a regard for the right of the people at large to have proper candidates proposed for their support, by party managers; and that the nomination of Davis presents an issue which should be met by all lovers of justice and by all who believe in the enforcement of the laws.

"INDEPENDENT REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE."

Getting Along.

How paintersty a fellow glides
From poverty to riches.
To holding down a leather chair
From toll and digging ditches!
And he can hardly realize
That once when he was shorter
He didn't buy what he desired
Because it cost a quarter.

Communing with a fat cigar,
His peduls on the table,
To think that he was once in need
Beems almost like a fable.
He wonders, if he wanted coin
When he was poor and thrifty,
Just why he didn't write a check
For twenty-five or fifty.

He looks about him and he sees
Men short of food and raiment.
Without a diamond stud because
They cannot make first payment.
He thinks that they could beat the game
If they were only gritty.
Forgotting how he atrugsled on
E'er luck on him took pity.

'Tis easy to forget the past
And down the road go spinning
All in a hendsome touring ear
When riches has an inning.
Although not many months away
From poverty's embraces,
He feels superior to those
Who sit in lowly player.
