THEATRICAL.

Clara Morris in "Camille."

A good attendance graced the auditorium of the Opera-House last night to greet Clara Morris in her great role of "Camille." The lady has made this personage so entirely her own, and throws into it so powerful a degree of intensity that theater-goers throughout the United States have come to accept it as the true interpretation of the ideal of the piece. There can be but one objection to Miss Morris as "Camille," and that is that she renders the part painfully realistic, and that is the highest praise that could be bestowed. We have seen Mme. Thierry and Sara Bernhardt perform this role. The former was a grand actress but a false glamour of morality; whilst Bernhardt went to the other extreme and made "Camille" a loose type of the Parisian demi-monde. Miss Morris never forgets that she is representing a woman who has placed an insuperable barrier between herself and society; but she infuses into the character a dignity and sentiment which redeems it from the fallen class to which it belongs. If there be any great lesson in Camille, it is in the shape of a warning to avoid the glare and glitter of vice; for retribution meets her at every step, until it at last culminates in one of the most harrowing scenes of supreme suffering depicted in the whole range of the drama. At the same time it is a protest against the tyranny of society—against its inexorable condemnation and hardness of heart. Without mercy, without pity, its rigors first force the friendless and helpless into streets where temptation triumphs over weakness, and then it places upon them the indelible mark which forever deprives them from hope and consigns them to an irrevocable life of shame. It makes them what they are, and then crushes them. Miss Morris brings out these characteristics of the piece in strong and striking colors. She plays constantly upon the emotions of her audience, and forces them, even against their will, to become her partisans. However much we may be disposed to look with coldness upon "Camille" to look of the class to which she belongs, the artist, by her rare powers, compels us to give out our sympathies to her. And then, when the end comes—when the universal lover, Death, is asserting himself—we forget all the precepts of the world, and let human nature assert itself by bowing before the majesty of a great human sacrifice. The strength of Miss Morris is in the perfection of art she displays in leading her audience up to the great climax of her personation, and, in spite of themselves, sympathizing with her in every stage of its progress. She was excellently supported last night by the very capable company she has brought with her. Mrs. Kate Denning-Wilson is a finished actress, and as "Madame Prudence" gave us a fine performance.To-night, Rene, Miss Morris' new and successful play.

BOLD BURGLARS.

Two Men Discovered in Clara Morris' Wardrobe.One of the boldest attempts at robbery that ever occurred in this city took place last night at the Nadeau House, at about half-past 9 o'clock, when two young men, fully armed, were found in the wardrobe of the rooms occupied by Clara Morris. It seems that the gifted actress has with her a very valuable collection of diamonds and other jewelry, and that it was this the burglars were after. Ed.
Hays and Bert Frank were the names of the burglars, and both had been bell-boys at the Nadeau House, one having retired about two weeks ago, and the other resigned on Monday evening. One of them had, no doubt, seen Clara Morris wear a portion of her jewels, and their plan was to enter her room while she was at the theater, take the jewels, and leave for San Francisco this morning.
Fortunately they were frustrated in their plan by the prompt action of W. W.
Lloyd, the watchman of the hotel. He discovered the burglars, and he called upon Clara Morris, heard noises in Miss Morris' rooms, and knowing that she was then at the Grand Opera House playing Camille, she hastened to communicate with Mr.
Lloyd, who went up stairs and tried to open the door by means of his pass key.
It would not enter the keyhole, and upon examination he found that there was another key in the hole on the inside of the door. Mr. Lloyd then became certain that something was wrong and he called to the burglars to open the door, but received no answer. He then procured the assistance of some of the guests, and stationing them where they could guard the passage, went to another door, which he unlocked.
When he entered the room the gas was burning, and casting a glance around he perceived no one. After a close search under the furniture, he came to the conclusion that they were in the wardrobe, and he opened the door of that closet, and saw two men standing still and as "straight as sticks." As he caught sight of them Hays cried: "Don't let them take us," and pulling a revolver he pointed it down at Mr. Lloyd, who knocked it down by closing the door.
The last three minutes and at the last third a gentleman came up behind, and with his cane, struck Hays on the head just as he raised the revolver. As Hays staggered Mr. Lloyd seized him by the throat, pulled him out of the closet and succeeded in taking his revolver away. While this was going on Frank had an opportunity of shooting Mr.
Lloyd in the back, but did not take advantage of it, and after Hays was secured he was also handcuffed. The police had been summoned by telephone and Officer Dillon arrived on the scene in time to assist in conveying the young men to the city prison, where they were charged with burglary. Mr. Lloyd stated that while he knew the diamonds were not in the room, being worn at the opera house by Miss Morris, he was afraid they had succeeded in picking up some other valuables, and he was determined that they should not escape. It was evident that they had thought to escape through the door nearest the stairway, but the prompt action on the part of Mr. Lloyd prevented their attempt. The keys which were found on the inside of the door were pass keys and skeleton keys, and were made to fit any door in the hotel. In their service at the hotel the bell boys had evidently collected keys, anticipating such an attempt.
For some time past articles of jewelry and valuables have disappeared from the rooms of some of the guests of the hotel, and recently a diamond ring valued at $150 disappeared. These losses are now laid on Hays and Frank, and it is expected that a search of their haunts and belongings will reveal many things, some of which have never been mentioned. As they intended to start for San Francisco to-day, it is just possible that they have packed their plunder and put it in some place where it may be discovered shortly. The police force has been notified, and detectives are now on the hunt. When searched at the prison both were found to have 38-caliber revolvers, one of which was at full cock.

The plateau of Arlington Heights offers the most magnificent view to be held in Southern California, embracing the whole of the Los Angeles Valley, and extending from San Pedro and Santa Monica on the Pacific ocean, across the plains to the foothills, and up to the snowy heights of the Sierra Madre mountains. This table land or mesa is perfectly level and unbroken for 60 feet higher than the elevation of Spring and Main streets. To reach it there are no hills to climb, and the streets leading from the center of Los Angeles city up to it follow the same even grade. It is as easy of access as Washington Gardens. The view from Arlington Heights is a rich loam, mellow and fertile at all seasons, and easy to cultivate. The vineyards and orchards surrounding it give undisputed evidence that every acre of Arlington Heights will produce grapes and fruit without irrigation.

A stream of purest well water is struck anywhere on the tract at a depth of from thirty to sixty feet. The plateau of Arlington Heights is unequalled for health. A daily sea breeze never reaches its elevation, and frost being almost unknown on the mesa, the most tender plants, such as the mango vine, bear fruit there every day of the year. The Santa Monica branch of the S. P. R. runs alongside this elegant tract; the present terminus of the Electric Street Railroad is distant one-half mile from Arlington Heights, and it is expected that it will be extended to and through Arlington Heights.Every city has its own fashionable suburb par excellence; as London has its Richmond, and Paris has its Saint Cloud. Arlington Heights, by a happy combination of advantages, promises to become a fastidious addition to Los Angeles, of the beautiful mansions and park-like grounds of the wealthy.The elegant lawns and stately mansions of the rich will be found here within a short time, and purchasers who take advantage of our low prices and easy terms will reap a golden harvest of their lives' meat in Arlington Heights.

CATARRH!

THE TERM CATARRH IS APPLIED TO a peculiar disorder of the nostrils and adjacent parts which prevails so an alarming extent and is productive of very serious consequences.The most prominent and characteristic feature is a morbid discharge from the head, varying in its nature at different times.In some there is an almost constant flow of clear, watery or mucous, or, in others, purulent or mucopurulent, greenish-yellow
