THE GIFT DIVINE. A single tree my prospect is.
Of all the lavish greenness
That summer yields, I have but this
In place of utter leanness.
Hemmed in by walls of brick and stone,
this one green outlook is my own.

But breadth of land and sweep of sea Have failed of such attraction.
And bloomy gardens granted me
Less simple satisfaction,
Less thankful sense of happiness,
Than now in one tree I possess.

It shuts all sordid things away; All pleasant things enhances; It fills the silence day by day With summer's sweetest fancies; Brooks babble, wild flowers smile for me And forests murmur in my tree.

Birds, too, and butterflies and bees Throng in its compass narrow;
A choir of rippling harmonies
I hear in one brown sparrow;
A clint of sudden sunshine brings
The dream of many colored wings.

Ah, gift divine! what sorrow curbs, What bitter fate can flout you? Better with you a meal of herbs Than the stalled ox without you; All nature's beauty in one tree.

OLD HORNUS.

A single French regiment, on an unspeltered railroad bank, stood like a target for the Prussian army, massed inthe woods some 80 yards away. As the bullets fell thick about them, the French officers ordered their men to lie cown, but not one would obey. All remained proudly standing about their

In that broad expanse of green pastures and waving cornfields illumined by the setting sun, that body of tormented men, enveloped in a cloud of smoke, looked like a flock surprised in the open fields by the first gust of a terrible tempest. It did indeed rain lead on that hillside! Nothing could be heard but the crackling discharge of musketry, the heavy rumbling of shells and the ceaseless vibration of balls all over the battlefield.

Again and again the flag fell, but every time a clear, bold voice rang out above the din of the musketry, the oaths of the wounded, the death rattle of the dying: "To the flag, boys! To the flag!

And instantly, like a vague shadow in that flery fog, an officer would spring forward, and the dauntless ensign, as if restored to life, would look down again upon the battle.

Twenty-two times it fell. Twentytwo times its staff, still warm as it sliped from a dying hand, was caught and raised again, and when at sunset the remnant of the regiment, a little handful of men, slowly retreated the flag was but a tattered rag in the hands of Sergeant Hornus, the twenty-third ensign of the day.

This Sorgeant Hornus, an old fellow who could scarcely sign his name, had been 20 years in gaining the rank of a noncommissioned officer. The miseries of the foundling and the brutality of the barracks, had left their impress in his low, obstinated row, his back bent by the krapsock and that unscrupuous air of the trooper in the ranks. He is not essential in an eneign. That same evening of the lattle his colonel said to him. "You have the flag, my gallant fellow- " I'. hep it."

And on his shouly army coat, worn and faded by rain and powder, the sutler placed at once the golden badge of ensign. This was the one glory of colonel's voice, "To the flag, boys!"

life. From this time the old troopHis 22 comrades lay there on the his life. From this time the old trooper held up his head. The poor soul, who heretofore had walked with bent ek and downcast glance, henceforth stood proudly erect, with eyes ever lifted to watch that scrap of cloth fluttering in the breeze, and to hold it very high, very upright, above death, defeat and treachery. Never was there a man so happy as Hornus when he stood on the battlefield, his hands clasped about his flagstaff in its leathern sheath. Silent, motionless, grave as a priest, one would have said that he was holding something sacred. His whole life, his whole being, centered in the fingers gripped about the beautiful golden rag upon which the balls seemed to hurl themselves, and his defiant eyes looked the Prussians straight in the face as if to say,"Just try now to take it from me!" No one did try-not even death. After those deadly battles of Borny and Gravelotte, the flag left the field cut to pieces, literally riddled with bulletholes, but it was still old Hornus who bore it. Then came September, the army at Metz, the siege, and that long encampment in the mud till the cannon rusted, and the finest troops in the world, demoralized by inaction, by lack of provisions and of news, died in the trenches of fever and despair and deadly weariness. Leaders and men alike lost confidence. Hornus alone still had faith. His tricolor rag was all the

Unfortunately, as there was no more fighting, the colonel kept the flag at his quarters in one of the suburbs of Metz. and honest Hornus was very like a mether whose child is out at nurse. He thought of it continually, and when his longing for it became unendurable he would rush off to the colonel's house, where the mere sight of his flag, resting tranquilly in its place against the wall, would send him back with courage renewed, to dream under his soaking tout of marches, of battles, of the flag floating gayly down there on the Prussian trenches.

An order of Marshal Bazaine destroyed these illusions. One morning Hornus awoke to find the camp in an uproar, the soldiers in excited groups shouting and talking angrily and gesticulating toward one part of the town. "Off with him! Shoot him!" they cried, and the officers, walking apart with heads bowed in shame before the men, let them talk on unheeded. It was indeed shameful! To 150,000 well armed, ablebodied men had just en read an order snarendering them to the enemy without Blow.

"And the first" denormed Horaus.
"The first were summer with the rest—the guns, see remens of the wagon trains—everything of the wagon trains—everything."
"Th-th-thunder" thannered the poor fellow, "they should be mine."

"To take my flag from me! Come now, can this be possible? Let him give the Prussians what is his own—his silver plate and his gilded coaches—but this is mine. It is my honor. I forbid any one to touch it."

His sentences were broken up by his hurried pace and his stammering tongue; but, after all, the old fellow had a plan, a clear and fixed purpose to take his flag, to carry it into the midst of the regiment, and with any who would follow him to fall upon the Prussians and destroy them utterly. When he reached the colonel's house, he was not even allowed to enter. The colonel too, was furious and would admit no one, but Hornus did not understand this. He wept, he swore, he tried to push past the orderly.

shouted.

Finally a window was thrown open. "It is you, Hornus?" "Yes, colonel--I"-

"All the flags are at the arsenal. You have only to go there for a receipt.

'A receipt-for what?" "It is the marshal's order."

"But, colonel"-"Gi-m-peace!" and down went mechanically. Finally he went off with but one clear idea in his head that his flag was at the arsenal, and that, come what would, he must see it The arsenal gates were opened wide for the passage of the Prussian wagons which were ranged in the yard. A chill passed over Hornus as he entered. All the other ensigns were there and 50 or 60 officers, silent and heartbroken. With the somber wagons standing in the rain and the groups of men with bared heads, it was like a funeral. All the flags of Bazaine's army were lying in a heap on one corner of the muddy pavement. Nothing could be sadder than those strips of bright hued silk, that debris of golden fringe and carved sticks, all that glorious paraphernalia thrown on the ground, soiled with mud and rain.

An officer picked them up, one by one, and as his regiment was called each ensign went forward to get a receipt. Hard and unsympathetic, two Prussian officers watched the registra-

You are going away with the shame of beautiful things soiled, and each of you will carry away a little of France. your worn folds the sunshine of the long marches still lingers. In your bullet holes you preserve the memory of the unknown dead, fallen perchance beneath the banner, struck" "Hornus, you-they are calling you.

Go get your receipt. There was the flag before him. It was really his, the most beautiful, the most mutilated of themeill, and seeing it once more he seemed to be standing again on the railroad bank. He heard the balls sing, the shells burst and the ground, and he, the twenty-third, was springing forward in his turn to seize it, to lift the poor flag, to a sustaining arm. Ah! he swore that day to defend it, to guard it till death. And now-the thought of all this sent every drop of blood in his body to his head. Maddened, desperate, he sprang upon the Prussian officer, tore from his grasp his beloved ensign and tried to lift it very high, very upright, crying, "To the fl"— but his voice died in his throat. The staff trembled and slipped from his fingers. In that weary air, that deadly air that weighed so heavily on the surrendered town, no flag could wave, no pride could live, and old Hornus fell, crushed.—Alphonse Daudet.

Horse Cures Horse.

"Of course horses cannot talk, but they understand each other just the same," remarked Peter Noell, one of the oldest and best known drivers on the Spring Grove avenue line of cars.

'For a long time I have been driving a sturdy, solid old bay. There is nothing fast about him, but when it comes to pulling he can discount any other horse owned by the company. He knows, too, when he is hitched up with a balky mate, and it is from his actions on occasions of that kind that I am convinced that horses understand each other. When he is in harness with a balky partner, he will stand perfectly still and let the other do all the prancing and kicking.

'When it quiets down a bit, he will rub its neck and puts his nose up to its ear, as if endeavoring to whisper to it. When it becomes quiet, the old fellow will make a move as if to start. If the other takes the que, well and good, but if there is one bit of rearing or jumping he will settle back in his place and repeat the neck rubbing and supposed whispering operations. The second one is generally successful, and with a slight neigh, as if his efforts had proved successful, the old fellow starts the car all by himself. I tell you he can cure more balky horses of their bad habits and in quicker time than all the trainers in Cincinnati put together."-Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

A Wonderful Engine.

CANNOT BE SURPASSED.—An engine exerting surpassing power is always a source of wonder, and yet how many are entirely forgetful of the existence within themselves of an engine more powerful and enduring than any ever invented. Not perhaps until they experience irregular pulse, heart fluttering, tenderness in shoulder and arm, swollen ankles assimatic breathing, weak and hungry spells, smothering, there breath, or pain in slice, when its existence is ne longer to be denied, as the possessor must know he has heart disease.
