THE PROGRESS OF ARIZONA

Governor Franklin's Eulogy of the Territory

Proposed Change of the Prison From Yuma to Prescott—The Railroad Extension Scheme

PHOENIX, Ariz., Feb. 4.—This is one of the few busy spots of the world that remind one much of Southern California—air a little drier, perhaps, and slightly less than Los Angeles. It is the famous Salt River valley of Arizona, where a new civilization is rapidly arising out of the ashes and sands of the past. Phoenix is rightly named and future historians will record with admiration how these Phoenixians of the American arid zone are now fast converting a desert into a paradise by the intelligent storage and use of water. Irrigation is rapidly making a garden spot of this heretofore desolate region, and pastoral, agricultural and horticultural achievements are demonstrated in the herds of alfalfa-fattened cattle, the grain fields, the substantial farm houses, and the orange, lemon and date groves. The Salt River valley is a veritable park.

To the people here who have participated in this great work of reclaiming the waste land, its possibilities are commonplace, but there are still a few persons in the country who have gained the impression that Arizona is a dreary wilderness, in which cacti and thorns are the only vegetation and tarantulas, centipedes, scorpions, Gila monsters and rattlesnakes are the only inhabitants, and to quote from Governor Benjamin J. Franklin's message to the territorial legislature now in session may serve to change their opinion. "We have the elements to make a great state. To be assured of this we have only to refer to our grand forests, our great fields of gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, zinc, tin, manganese, agricultural area, our 40,000,000 acres of grazing land upon which great herds of cattle will be reared, yielding millions of dollars annually."

"The financial depression that has prevailed throughout the country has, of course, affected Arizona, yet I feel safe in stating that a condition of more rapid and more extensive growth exists within our borders. There has been a large increase in the output of our mines; the population during the last two years has increased nearly 20,000, and the territory is in a more flourishing condition than it has been for a decade of years. Our agricultural development has been more than could be expected, and the financial condition that has prevailed through the country."

"We need capital to develop our great resources and I trust that you will enact no legislation that will keep it from seeking an investment within our borders."

In the following he summarizes the advantages of the Arizonan as shown in the past year:

"The millions of acres of arable land that can be made to blossom as a garden. We have the water that could reclaim them all; what we need is capital, and your legislation should be so framed so as to deter it from seeking an investment here."

"Our mineral output for the past year amounts to nearly $14,000,000, and I believe that the territory is capable of producing more than this amount. It is impossible to obtain the exact figures."

"As a copper producing territory we will soon rank first in the union, and our gold production has increased annually."

"The export of cattle during the past year amounts to nearly $3,000,000. This is a grand exhibit of which any Arizonan should be proud."

"Our mining industries are in the very infancy of their development and our great agricultural lands, which are susceptible of development when water is supplied, will be the source of immense wealth to come to our territory."

"Our climate cannot be excelled by any portion of the globe. No port of the Mediterranean exceeds it, and I hope your legislation may be such as will induce immigration."

The governor's message was not all eulogy of the territory. It was intensely practical in its recommendations and suggestions and thoroughly Democratic in spirit. He gave his reasons for not sanctioning the prison law, and for the removal of the prison from Yuma to Prescott, and the people of the mountain city, led by Buckley O'Neil, its mayor, and Editor Martin of the Journal-Miner are "not overlooking any bet," as they say in Arizona, in this matter of the proposed prison removal. The prison property is valued at about $150,000, including the "steals" for which the old Hughes board of control are accused of being responsible. By the way, the Arizonans are not satisfied with the outcome of the investigation into the mathematical methods of the old board of control and more investigation may be indulged in.

The governor has on record as a reformer in more than one sense, and he favors every inquiry into the inequities of the past regime for the whole territory. He has not yet had a word from the outside of the board of control and a Colorado river land improvement concern called the State of Arizona Improvement company.

Part of the contract the company was to get all of the benefit and the territory all the obligation and expense. This is why, says the governor, he is not satisfied with the outcome of the investigation into the mathematical methods of the old board of control and more investigation may be indulged in.

A measure is up before the legislature for the removal of the territorial prison from Yuma to Prescott, and the people of the mountain city, led by Buckley O'Neil, its mayor, and Editor Martin of the Journal-Miner are "not overlooking any bet," as they say in Arizona, in this matter of the proposed prison removal. The prison property is valued at about $150,000, including the "steals" for which the old Hughes board of control are accused of being responsible. By the way, the Arizonans are not satisfied with the outcome of the investigation into the mathematical methods of the old board of control and more investigation may be indulged in.

The governor has on record as a reformer in more than one sense, and he favors every inquiry into the inequities of the past regime for the whole territory. He has not yet had a word from the outside of the board of control and a Colorado river land improvement concern called the State of Arizona Improvement company.

Part of the contract the company was to get all of the benefit and the territory all the obligation and expense. This is why, says the governor, he is not satisfied with the outcome of the investigation into the mathematical methods of the old board of control and more investigation may be indulged in.
