MURDERER IS CAPTURED BY PATROLMAN

OFFICER HAS DESPERATE CONFLICT

THUG TRIES TO KILL HIS CAPTOR

Policeman's Hand Is Torn by Revolver Hammer—Subdues Fugitive with Terrific Blows on Head

he asked, and made a motion to arise.
"I then jerked his hand out of his pocket and saw that the first finger was gone.
"Mitchell jumped up and grabbed me and we clinched. I got him to the floor, but he sprang up. Just as he did so I struck him in the face with my fist and he fell to his knees, but he was up in an instant, and this time with a revolver in his right hand.

Roll on Floor
"I grasped the weapon by the barrel and tried to wrest it from Mitchell, but his grip was too firm. He tried repeatedly to turn the muzzle toward my body, and it was a hard task to keep him from doing so. Finally I ran my hand down the barrel and got my thumb behind the trigger. My whole thumb was inserted, and this probably saved my life.

"We were down on the floor again, rolling about. He pulled the trigger repeatedly, but my thumb kept the revolver from being discharged. We finally got to our feet and I called to the men in the room to come to my assistance, telling them the man had a revolver.

"I still held the revolver with my left hand, while grasping Mitchell's left arm with my right hand.
"Then a man, who proved later to be W. D. Murray, came up behind Mitchell and struck him on the head with a billiard ball, and as he turned to see who had struck him I hit him in the face with my right hand and he went down. His capture after that was easy."

Makes Confession

Mitchell was taken to the police station and cased in Captain Flammie's office, where he was examined. He confessed his identity, and gave the officers facts which they refused to make public.

Following the examination a statement was issued by Captain Flammie and Prosecuting Attorney Fleming in which they declared the men who killed Patrolman Lyons were in the city jail.

"We have the persons who committed the robbery at Fourteenth street and Central avenue last Saturday night, and who killed Police Officer P. H. Lyons. The defendants are Rolla Robe and Harry Mitchell.

"After consultation with Prosecuting Attorney E. J. Fleming we have decided that the evidence in our possession will not be given to the public until it is presented in court.

P. E. FLAMMIE,
"Captain of Detectives."

"Complaints against the above defendants will be issued tomorrow morning, December 4. E. J. FLEMING,
"Prosecuting Attorney."

Explaining his refusal to give out any information regarding the statements made by Mitchell, Prosecuting Attorney Fleming said:
"The ends of justice will not be served by giving what we have learned to the public. My experience as a prosecuting officer has been that we have had great difficulty in our trial of cases when the facts in our possession were known outside.

Certain of Conviction

"However, I will say that I am certain these men will be convicted. I intend to rush these cases as rapidly as possible, always taking into consideration the rights of the defendants, and they will be given the right of way over all other cases.

"I think the people of Los Angeles will say when this thing is ended that verdicts in these cases will have been more quickly rendered than in any trial of recent years."

Mitchell's movements since his arrival in Los Angeles were investigated yesterday after his arrest. He reached the city about five weeks ago and secured a room at 322 South Broadway. It was at this place he met with an accident that caused him to later lose his finger. The accident on which the police have depended mostly as a clue to the man. While examining a revolver in his room the weapon was accidentally discharged, the bullet making its way through the base of the index finger of the left hand.

Finger Amputated

Mitchell went to the receiving hospital and had the wound dressed by Dr. Quint, who told him it would be necessary to amputate it later, and asked the man to return in a couple of days. He failed, however, to again appear at the hospital, but the amputation was performed by another surgeon.

November 16 Mitchell moved from his Broadway room to 728 San Julian street, where he remained until November 23. After that his movements were uncertain until November 30, when he moved to a rooming house at 1234 1/2 East Seventh street. This was the day on which Lyons was killed, and Mitchell was still occupying the room at the time of his arrest.

Police made a search of the room and found a suit case containing a .32-caliber Colt's revolver, a pair of blue overalls, a black cloth cap with a long white mask attached and a number of other articles indicating that the owner was a criminal.

Carries Big Gun

The revolver carried by Mitchell at the time of his arrest is a .45-caliber Colt's, and has been identified by the police as the weapon used in the killing of Patrolman Lyons. It was at police headquarters yesterday when Mitchell was taken to the station.

She expressed great relief when told of the capture. "I know my husband will be exonerated of the murder charge now," she said. "He said it was Mitchell who did the shooting, and now he will be able to prove that his statements were true. Oh, I am so glad this man has been captured at last, and I know he is responsible for my husband's wrongdoing."

There were other visitors at the station interested in the arrest, and as a result of their presence a man who has been charged with numerous holdups and robberies was last night released from the city jail, after spending three days behind the bars.

Lauman Is Released

This man is George Lauman, and he was released after the effort, and his wife, Wallace W. Wideman and Judge Frank Harold, who brought him to the station to swear that Lauman, whom they had previously told the police had robbed their places of business, was not the right man, but declared Mitchell was the real man.

The principal reason for their identification of Lauman as the man who robbed them was that he had two fingers and a thumb missing, falling in their excitement at the time of the holdups to note the fact that the robber had but one finger.

The attorneys for Lauman planned to secure his release yesterday afternoon on a writ of habeas corpus, but, according to their statement, they were asked by the police to hold back a short time.
"We tried to see Lauman later," said Mr. Wideman, "but the police would not let us do so, as they wished to make a further investigation. We were put off until 5 o'clock, but when we appeared at that time we were again put off and asked to wait a few hours. We told the police we would ask for a writ at 7 o'clock, and when we went to the station at that hour our man was released, the police declaring they had the wrong man."

Fearful Term in Jail

"Lauman and Mitchell were placed side by side, and the men who stated on Sunday that Lauman had held up their places then declared that Mitchell was the right man."

Lauman, after his release, was greatly relieved. "I believed I was in a pretty tight fix," he said, "and the fact that these men had identified me as the man who held up their places made me feel pretty nervous. I knew I would come out all right, but feared a long term in jail while my trial was pending."
Lauman was very pale and had lost considerable flesh during the time he was in jail. His eyes were red from weeping and his whole appearance, as he walked out of the jail, was one of dejection. He will return to work at the Lyon dye works today.

Crowd Is Curious

The news of Mitchell's arrest spread like wildfire throughout the downtown districts, and within half an hour after he was taken to the station, the street and sidewalks in front of police headquarters were thronged with people, all anxious to get a glimpse of the man. It was necessary for officers to keep the sidewalk and street open for the passage of pedestrians and vehicles for two hours after Mitchell's arrest. The largest crowd gathered around an ambulance from the county hospital, standing in front of the main entrance to the station, many of the curious believing it to be a patrol wagon held in readiness to take the man to the county jail. An inmate patient from the receiving hospital was placed in the ambulance and driven off, and the crowd was materially diminished because of this, a majority believing they had seen the man for whom the police have been searching high and low for three days.

Patrolman Connelly was the object of much praise for his work in capturing Mitchell. He was modest when telling his part of the struggle in the poolroom, and praised highly the men who aided him. Officers connected with the department were unenthusiastic in their praise of Connelly, and patrolmen, and firemen with whom he had formerly been associated and citizens expressed their congratulations.

Council Interested

When the news of Connelly's plucky capture reached the city council all work was stopped and everyone in the council chamber was anxious to learn all the details.

In the morning the council had passed a resolution voting a reward of $250 for the capture of Lyons' murderer. Following the receipt of the news that Mitchell was in jail, the morning's action was rescinded, as it was stated no reward could be paid a city policeman. As the ordinance had not been published the council was able to reconsider its vote.

The police board late yesterday passed resolutions commending Chief of Police Kern and the department for its excellent work in capturing Robe and Mitchell and for the excellent work done by the police force as a whole in running down men concerned in criminal acts in Los Angeles.

Mitchell Dejected

Mitchell, after his examination yesterday, appeared dejected, although he seemed to be endeavoring to put on a brave air. He seemed greatly relieved when taken from the main part of the station into the jail itself, and submitted to a search without hesitancy. As his photograph was being taken in the upper part of the jail, he posed with readiness, and carefully brushed back his hair with one hand.

That he has been concerned in many holdups in Los Angeles during his five weeks' stay is the belief of the police, and he was identified last night as the man who held up the drug store of Charles Lawler, 1601 South Main street, and the butcher shop of H. Grandereau and A. C. Knowles, at 307 Wesley avenue, while, according to the confession made by Robe, Mitchell is the man who held up the Belle-Vernon dairy. All these robberies took place a week prior to Robe's arrest, Saturday last.

Robe, in his statement to the police, said he had met Mitchell in the Arizona poolroom, on Main street, near First, about ten days ago. Mitchell, he said, represented to him that the life of a holdup man was easy and money was plentiful. He declared he became impressed greatly with Mitchell's tales of his experiences, especially in northwest-ern cities, and they planned to begin their first work together last Saturday.

Steel Horse and Wagon

The first place decided on as an inviting spot for their work was the grocery of George Garlema at Eighth and Central avenue. Here they were frightened away by the screams of Garlema's daughter and the call by Garlema that police were coming. Stealing the horse and wagon, they started down Central avenue, but collided with a Central avenue car and were thrown out. Here, Robe declared, he lost his revolver, and said Mitchell gave him one of a smaller caliber than his own, and that it would be shown on examination that it was a bullet from Mitchell's weapon that killed Patrolman Lyons.

The next place to be attacked after the men left Garlema's was the Magnolia winery, two blocks distant. Here it was that Patrolman Lyons, in his efforts to capture the two men, met his death from a pistol in the hands of one of the robbers.

Hold Up Grocery

The two men then ran to a rendezvous, previously selected, near Eighth and Hemlock streets, and after a consultation decided that, in view of the excitement they had caused, they would perform another robbery, which they did at Twelfth and Tennessee, holding up a small grocery.

It was after Robe had reached the rendezvous a second time that he was captured. Patrolman Lyons' body is at Pierce Brothers' undertaking establishment. An inquest was to have been held yesterday, but, because of the arrest of Mitchell, was postponed until today.

BALL PLAYER ENDS STRUGGLE WITH MISSILE

When Patrolman Connelly walked into the Maynard & Thrall pool room at Seventh and Merchant streets, where Mitchell was coolly engaged in watching a game of checkers, he had no idea that he was within a few moments to enter into a conflict for his life.

In passing by the table where the checker players were engaged he noticed this stockily built young man who was leaning over the shoulder of one of the players. The next moment he noticed that the index finger of the left hand was gone, and he walked on to the rear

MAIL CLERK SOLVES IT

DELIVERS THIS LETTER TO DICK FERRIS AT THE AUDITORIUM THEATER

MAIL CLERKS, after they have been in the business several years, necessarily become highly proficient in deciphering cryptic addresses. Ordinarily their chief difficulty is occasioned by correspondents whose handwriting is almost illegible. Occasionally, however, they have to cope with the practical joker as well.

Now the mail clerk is a busy individual. During working hours he has no time for play, but he is also extremely jealous of the good name of the service, and for this reason it has become somewhat a point of honor with him to solve any "blind" address, submitted for solution.

Once in a while the cleverness of these concealed addresses amply repays the labor they entail. Thus a clerk, one day, found a letter addressed as follows:
Wood
John
Mass.

He studied for a time and finally sent the missive on its way to John Underwood, Andover, Massachusetts. There have been other blind addresses of almost equal cleverness, but this one is, perhaps, the best known.

It is a common trick to paste a picture on the envelope and then mail the inclosed note, with none other than the picture and a drink of water from the ice cooler and studied over the matter.

Then he came back and looked the young man over again.
After this last inspection, Connelly was convinced that the man he had under his eye was the murderer of Patrolman Lyons, but in a spirit of caution he walked to the front of the room and called Thomas H. Maynard, one of the proprietors of the place, to one side and asked him who the fellow was.

Maynard replied that he was a young man who had first appeared in the room several days before and had been playing pool and checkers in the place.
After looking the man over again carefully, Connelly advanced and laid his hand on the man's shoulder.

"Mitchell, I want you to see said. I am afraid the fellow turned, and as he did so he drew from his trousers pocket a big revolver and thrust its muzzle toward the policeman's face.
As quick as his movement had been, that of the officer was quicker. As the revolver rose to a level he threw out his hand and grasped it, with his thumb between the breech and the hammer.

Thumb Saves Life
Six times the hammer fell under the pull of the trigger, but Connelly held on and the pin failed to reach the cartridges.

"I killed one policeman already, and I'll kill you yet," yelled Mitchell, as he struggled to discharge his gun at Connelly.
"I'll get you first, if I can," cried the policeman, as he threw his whole weight on the man and tried to beat him to the floor.

At this point, W. D. Murray, an employee of the city street department and a former policeman, came to Connelly's assistance.
He rushed at Mitchell and grasped him by the throat. In the struggle which followed Murray was beat over the head by the big gun in Mitchell's hand and his scalp and face cut to ribbons by the blow.

In an indiscriminate mass the three men struggled for several minutes until William Asmus, a ball player, who had at first alarm run from the place, returned and picked up a billiard ball from a table in the rear of the room.

Stepping closely to the three men, Asmus poised himself as in the days of his ball playing and, throwing the billiard ball with all his force, struck Mitchell on the left cheek just below the eye.

The blow cut a gash in the man's face and knocked him insensible to the floor. In a minute he was handcuffed and helpless.

Without the assistance of Murray and Asmus, Patrolman Connelly would have undoubtedly been killed and the holdup man would have escaped.

As he reads his old friend is still arguing the superiority of his son, the one who has just robbed his partner. Fatherly pride and anger, the wrong done struggle in the old man's heart with the inclination to tell the deacon of his son's crime.

Friendship turns the scale in favor of silence, and the deacon leaves, not knowing that the son of whom he boasted so loudly was a thief.

Both characters were presented in a manner that left nothing to be desired. In makeup, voice and action both Willard and Lindhart were the living personation of the old friends. "Two Old Men" will be given as a curtain raiser at each performance of "A Texas Ranger."

NEW PLAYLET PROVES ARTISTIC PRODUCTION

Lee Willard Demonstrates He Is Worthy of a Better Role Than Is Provided by "A Texas Ranger"

Mr. Lee Willard, who is playing at the head of the "Texas Ranger" company at the Grand, demonstrated last night that he is capable of better things than the ranting cowboy stunt presented by his company. As a curtain raiser yesterday afternoon and evening Mr. Willard and Leo Lindhart, of his company, offered a one act playlet entitled "Two Old Men."

The old cronies are the deacon and his neighbor, "through differing widely in almost every philosophy of life, they are and always have been faithful friends. They are talking over boyhood friends who have all passed away as the curtain rises, and from that come to the discussion of their two sons, who have been set up in business in the city by the parents jointly.

The deacon lords it somewhat over his friend because the deacon's son "has more grit up" than his friend's boy. He also claims that his boy is a much better boy than his friend's because he writes home often, and attributes this to the Sunday religious training received at the country school. The other old man maintains his fatherly pride in remembering the "good times" he and his boy have had together.

WITNESS IN POWERS CASE DISAPPEARS

LEAVES KENTUCKY, REFUSES TO RETURN

Frank Cecil, Who Was Expected to Give Strong Evidence Against Accused Man, Flees in the Night

By Associated Press.

GEORGETOWN, Ky., Dec. 3.—At the opening of the trial of Caleb Powers today the commonwealth put Robert Noakes, railroad conductor and labor leader of Rossville, Ill., on the witness stand. Noakes was jointly charged with Taylor, Powers and Finley with being accessory to the assassination of Goebel, but escaped indictment, it is alleged, by turning state's evidence. Noakes testified that under the direction of Finley and Powers he took a body of men to Frankfort in November, 1899, while the state election board was in session for the purpose of intimidating that body.

He said he had instructions to see that justice was had or to "hang the commonwealth." After reaching Frankfort he was told by Finley to take the men back, as Governor Bradley did not approve of the plans. The witness detailed a conversation with Powers on the train near Louisville, Ky., in which he said Powers assured that it was a trick on the part of the prosecution to delay or stop the trial, as Cecil is known to be one of the strongest witnesses against Powers.

The prosecution is said to have information that Cecil told a friend yesterday before leaving that he had $2000 and a promise of pardon for jumping his bond. The name of this friend is not given.

Witness Disappears
A sensation was caused when it became known that Frank Cecil, one of the chief witnesses for the prosecution, had disappeared during the night. The prosecution asserts that the defense has run Cecil away to keep him from testifying, while the deacon's attorney said that it is a trick on the part of the prosecution to delay or stop the trial, as Cecil is known to be one of the strongest witnesses against Powers.

The prosecution is said to have information that Cecil told a friend yesterday before leaving that he had $2000 and a promise of pardon for jumping his bond. The name of this friend is not given.

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill., Dec. 3.—Frank Cecil, who was sworn in as one of the chief witnesses in the trial of Caleb Powers at Georgetown, Ky., and whose departure from there caused a sensation, is here and says he will not return to Georgetown to attend the Powers trial. He said today that he had been at Georgetown for three weeks to be called upon to testify and then, despite the protest of the state's attorney, he came home for Thanksgiving. When he returned to Georgetown Monday he said he was expected to testify, but for having left this angered him and he immediately returned here.

"I will be at Frankfort in January for my own trial, but no human power will get me back in Kentucky before that time," he said.

Cecil, who is a former resident of Middleboro, Ky., is under indictment on the charge of sharing in a plot leading to the murder of William Goebel, and his trial is set for January. Cecil employed by the Terminal Railroad association here as a detective.
