MR. MERCHANT:

You have goods on your shelves that bear the hall mark of refinement. Articles altogether charming; things that give the finish to the well-dressed; things with which you were so well pleased that you wired congratulations to your buyer. But they have not gone so quickly as you might wish. Things of less value have moved steadily but the real bargains in which you give more than the money's worth are still in stock. Don't let it grieve you. Beware of the temptation of things in the groove of a successful business. Let the Herald clear that stock for you. Every morning thousands of those who are readers of the family press read The Herald and verticeously. Your description of the goods you wish to move will catch the watchful eye of this treasure and not will you be called. The secret of your success is that you have been active. Let The Herald help you keep things moving.

Reflections of a Bachelor

Most men have to die to have decent things said about them. By giving up tobacco a man can spend more on his other bad habits. The reason a man argues politics is he doesn't know what he is talking about. A great disappointment about marrying a rich wife is she can spend it just as it was pocket full of money.—New York Press.

A bank account with nothing in it is more respectable than not having one with yours.

Reflections of a Bachelor

A woman is so contrary she could like a man because she didn't. One penalty for a man's not liking his wife's new hat is he can pay for another. The most aggravating thing about having a good reputation is what a fine time you could have if you didn't. When a girl gives you her cheek to kiss in public it's a sign she really knows how to do it when nobody is around. A girl hankers after an elopement because it usually means a bigger notice in the newspapers than the other way.—New York Press.
