AT THE LAST!

O God, who hears the smallest cry
That ever rose from human soul,
Be near my mother when she reads
My name upon the Honor Roll:
And when she sees it written there,
Dear Lord, stand to, behind her chair!

Or, if it be Thy sacred will
That I may go and stroke her hand,
Just let me say, "I'm living still!"
And in a brighter, better land."

One word from me will cheer her so.
O Lord, if you will let me go!

I know her eyes with tears will blind,
I think I hear her choking cry,
When in the list my name she'll find--

Oh, let me--let me--let me try
To somehow make her understand That it is not so hard to die!

She's thinking of the thirst and pain,
She's thinking of the saddest things,
She does not know an angel came
And let me to the water-springs,
She does not know the quiet peace
That fell upon my heart like rain,
When something sounded my release.

And something eased the scorching pain,
She does not know, I gladly went,
And am with Death, content, content.

I want to say I played the game-- I played the game right to the end--

I did not shrink at shot or flame,
But when at last the good old friend,
That some call Death, came beckoning me,
I went with him, quite willingly!

Just let me tell her--let her know--
It really was not hard to go!
--Nellie McClung, in "Next of Kin."
