JOHN M'CULLOUGH.

PATHETIC SCENE AT HIS LAST REHEARSAL IN CHICAGO.

The Company Go Through the "Gladiator" to Humor the Actor—A Time of Universal Sorrow—The Breaking Down.

[Inter Ocean.]

The leading actor in support of Mr. McCullough the last season he played was Joseph Haworth, and he it was who played Pharsarius to the Spartacus of the great actor the memorable night at McVicker's. Mr. Haworth recently gave a sadly interesting account of the final performance, and then described a scene that few other than the company witnessed. We need make no excuse for the words of one who loved McCullough scarcely less than he admired him.

"The next morning we were all paid, and the company disbanded, but we received word that the 'Governor' wanted a rehearsal. Knowing his condition, and just to humor him in the hope that it would do him good, we all responded. We first went through with the 'Gladiator.'

"'We didn't do very well last night, my boy,' he said to me, 'but we'll knock 'em out to night.'

"He wasn't very choice in his diction at times, as you may imagine, but those were the words he used.

THE LAST REHEARSAL.

"What a rehearsal that was! As perfectly as he ever did in his life he rendered every line. For a time we all had hope that his difficulty was temporary. We thought that after a short rest he would be himself again, and the company would be reunited. Into every word he seemed to put a meaning that we had never realized before. When he said to me, in committing to my charge his wife and child, 'Pharsarius, I give thee more than my life; guard them well,' it was with genuine sorrow that Mrs. Foster, who took the part of wife to Spartacus, replied, 'Husband, husband, do not send me away: if I leave you now it will be forever.' She could hardly finish the line because of her feelings. I could not avoid experiencing the same sorrow, and as I turned to look another way I saw that the prompter, as well as Harry Langdon and others in the company, were brushing tears from their eyes, and the little child we had with us for child parts broke out in a genuine cry. McCullough did not seem to realize it all. He acted as though he thought it a part of the emotion to be shown in the play.

A PROPHETIC LINE.

"When the scene came where Spartacus dies it was the most realistic performance I ever saw. His eye lighted up as he said, 'We shall see Thrace again,' and then as he said 'There are green valleys in Thrace' it was in such a tone of sadness that it set the minds of all who heard him wandering from the scene before them. Then his head dropped upon his breast, and it seemed as if he had passed away from us in reality.

"He was so pleased with the rehearsal that he wanted to make up 'Richelieu.' Well, we went through that play in the same perfect manner that we exhibited in the 'Gladiator.' There wasn't a break anywhere. He delivered the curse magnificently, and while some of the company could not keep back the tears of sympathy they felt for the 'Governor,' others were applauding him. The applause seemed to revive him, and he acted even better than he had been doing. We could see a gleam of his own self, a flash of the genius he possessed. Baradas recited:

'H e m i l a n t l i f e a n s h e a k i n g f i r e'

"The 'Governor' turned to denounce him, and as he did so seemed to realize the full import of the words. He broke completely down, and was then taken to his hotel in a carriage. That was the last we saw of him. It was the saddest day I ever passed, for there was no one in the company who did not feel the burden that oppressed us. There was never an actor more thoroughly loved by his company than was John McCullough."

Competitive Pr ze for Pickpocket ng.

[Chicago Tribune.]

English pickpockets, who are universally acknowledged to be at the head of the profession, have sustained an alarming defeat at the Antwerp exhibition, for it appears that when the statistics with regard to pickpocketing in general were drawn up there were only eighty-five Britons who had, as envious foreigners term it, "indulged in this kind of national sport."

Among the 577 individuals who were arrested for practicing the art of legerdemain, Germany stands first, with a contingent of 211, Belgium supplies 117, Holland 68, and France only 19. The rumor grows that the defeated, dismayed at the evident decadence among them, have immediately instituted a competition in pickpocketing, in which the prize—a beautiful work of art—will be awarded to any one "gathering" in the course of forty-eight hours the largest number of watches and purses at stations and in churches.

Prefer S ngle Rooms to Suites.

[Boston Transcript.]

Great difficulty has been experienced in letting the suites of rooms in the new model lodging building which a London commission has erected. The cost of the site and of the structure itself approached $1,000,000, and it provides 239 flats or sets of chambers for the working class. Though the whole has been finished about ten months, only one-half the accommodation has been taken. It is stated that tenements consisting of a single room have been eagerly seized upon in all parts of the building.

Superstitious O l in of Antwerp.

[Cy Kansas City Times.]

This city was so ancient that its genealogists with ridiculous gravity discovered a huge giant upon the banks of the river Scheldt. Tradition has it that this old patriarch exacted one half of the merchandise as a toll for landing, and those that refused to pay this simple tariff had their right hands cut off and thrown into the river. Thus hand-worten hand-throwing became Antwerp.

Tobacco in Tennessee.

The culture of tobacco is said to be extending rapidly in the eastern part of Tennessee. Good judges say that the soil is suitable for the production of as fine a grade of tobacco as can be grown in the world.
