First Navajo National Bank Has Medicine Man Ceremony

By Aus-Zazi Tsosie (Slim Gossip)

The new First Navajo National Bank Building at Window Rock was dedicated during the Navajo Tribal Fair in a historic first by being given the Navajo Blessing Way Ceremony conducted by Medicine Man, Ned Many Moons of Coppermine. The Navajo Blessing Ceremony used in traditional Navajo prayers for hogans and dwellings of the Navajo people is believed to ward off evil spirits and bring good omens for the health and welfare of the occupants of the dwelling.

Thus, the First Navajo National Bank in which the Navajo Tribe owns one-third interest is considered by the Navajo People to be given a favorable start for the future by virtue of the Medicine man Blessing performed on the bank.

The new bank which is located at the Window Rock Junction next to the Arts and Crafts building is an attractive structure and inside presents a homey warm atmosphere to visitors.

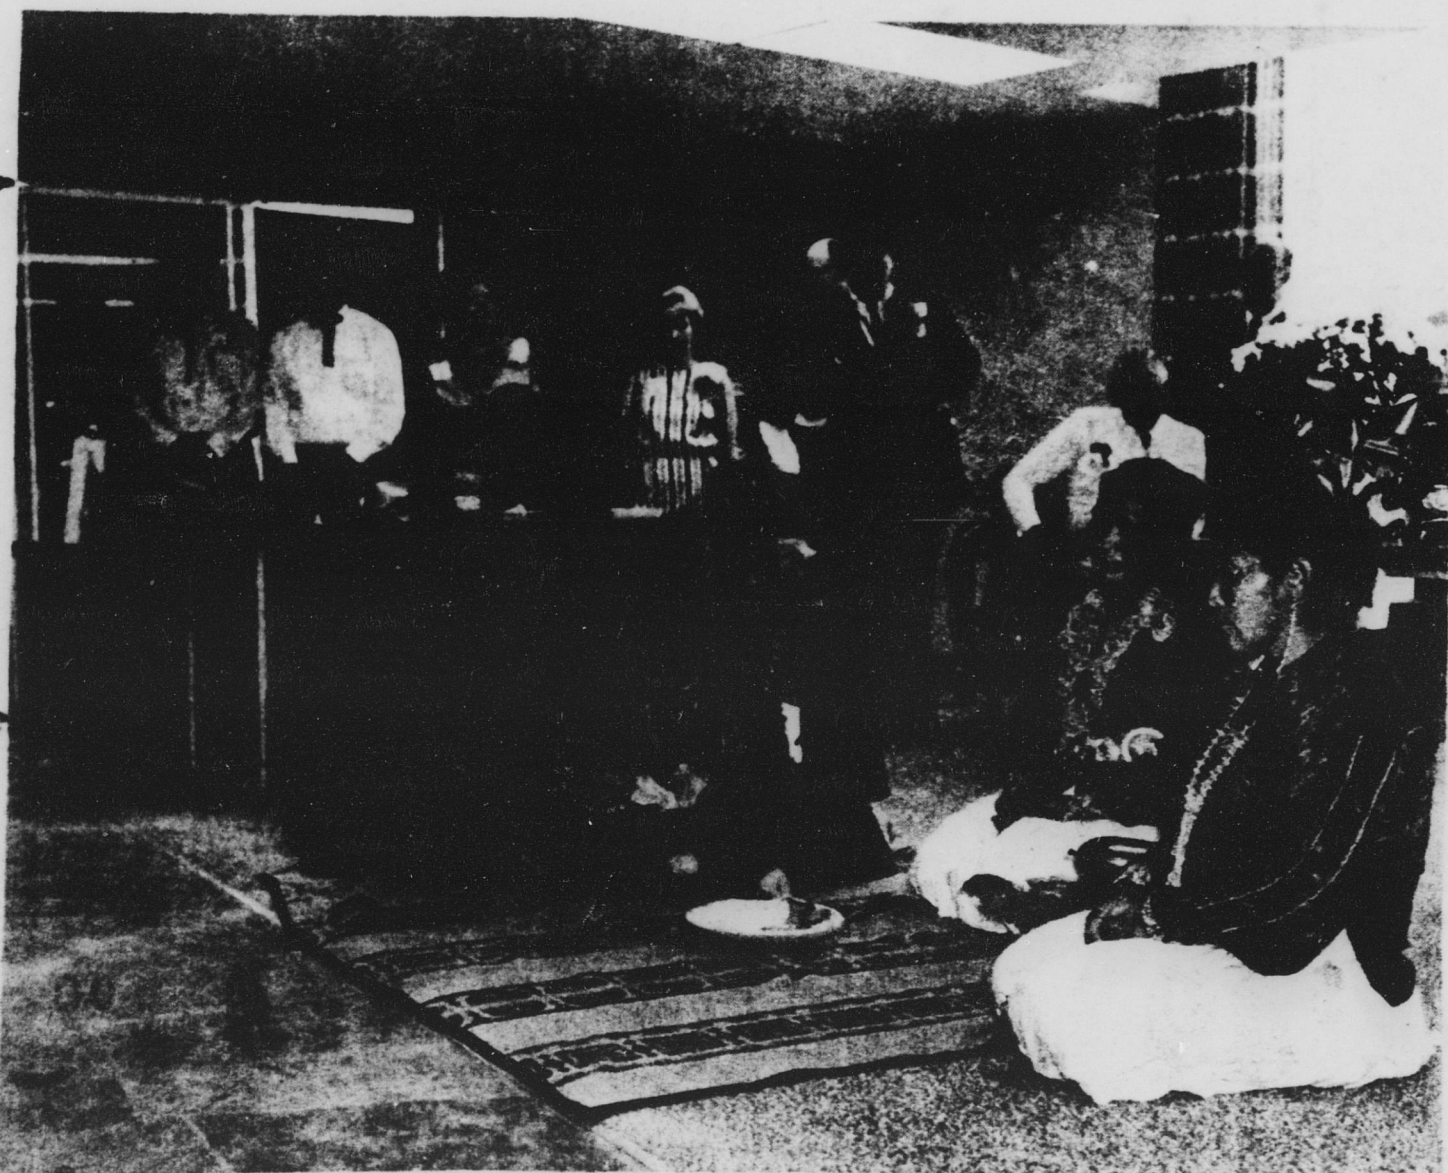

In the Blessing Ceremony, Medicine Man, Ned Many Moons and his assistants conducted solemn and impressive chants and dances and prayers, with blessed corn pollen being scattered over doorways and north, south, east and west.

Councilman Carl Todechenie served as master of ceremonies and commented for non-Navajo spectators on the proceedings involved in the traditional ceremonial conducted by Medicine Man, Ned Many Moons.

Following the ceremony, Todechenie introduced guests, tribal officials, bureau officials and bank officers.

Medicine Man, Many Moons, was assisted in the Blessing Ceremony by Harvey Butler and two Navajo women.
