After a little diplomacy-some effort to obtain the situation-as the labor union had to be placated-he was taken into the railroad repair shops as an apprentice, to learn the trade. This required five years of steady work, but the brave boy, inspired by his brave little mother, was equal to the situation. His wages for the first two years were to be earned, taxes paid and the recurring payments upon the mortgage to be promptly met. But the courageous mother and her dutiful son held right to their undertakings, working and J. G. VAN ORMAN saving, and at the end of five years his is agent for following well known insur-
