Truth And Falsehood.

BY JOHN PERPONT.

On the page that is immortal

We the brillian' promise see;

For the truth then let us battle,

Whatsoever fate le'ide!

'Ye shall know the Truth, my prople,

Long the boast that we are t ceman,

He who has the Truth and keeps it.

Keeps not what to him belongs.

That his fellow mortal wrongs.

At the dangers he must blav .

Is not fit to be a freeman:

He, at best is but a slave.

But can never be a min.

He who seeks the fruth and trem'les

He who bears the Truth, and places

Its high promptings under Man,

Loud may Loast of all that's manly,

Friend, this simple lay who reviest,

Be not then like either them-

And the tide it raises, stem.

But to Truth give utmost freedom,

Bold in speech and bold in action.
