LEGISLATURE WINDS UP

State-Wide Prohibition Debated

Frankfort, Ky., March 31 — The final session of the Kentucky Legislature opened Thursday, the third day of the final week of the two-month session, and according to all reports, is expected to adjourn within the next two days. However, the session is expected to be busy, with a number of important bills expected to come up for consideration.

One of the most important bills expected to be debated is the State-Wide Prohibition bill, which has been the subject of intense debate throughout the session. The bill, which would prohibit the sale and manufacture of all alcoholic beverages, has been the subject of heated debate, with supporters and opponents on both sides of the issue.

Supporters of the bill argue that it would help to reduce crime and improve public health, while opponents argue that it would lead to a black market and make the situation worse.

Another important bill expected to come up for consideration is the education bill, which would provide funding for public schools and improve teacher salaries.

The session is expected to be closed by the adjournment of the legislature, which is scheduled for April 4.
