Elsewhere in this issue appears a letter from Dr. J. R. Mohler of Washington, relating to the disease prevalent among sheep in eastern Montana and Wyoming. The article was published in the Stockgrowers Journal and is copied in this paper by request of certain sheepmen in this vicinity. Owing to the fact that the article is very lengthy we will publish but a part of it in this issue—to be concluded next week—along with a formula containing necessary instructions for treating sheep that may be so afflicted.

Nature of Disease.

Infections by this one bacillus (necrosis bacillus) are often brought together under the term necrobacillosis. Other names which have been given the disease are a ute dermatitis in New Zealand, im- etigo labialis in Canada, or crusto labialis and contagious pustular dermatitis in England and Scotland and teigman and magrud in Germany. This disease also exists in the West Indies, New Mexico, Oregon, Kansas, Montana, Virginia, Maryland, and probably other sections of the United States.

The lesions of the early stage usually appear as an acute inflammation of the skin on the outside of the lips. This pimple-like formation is attended with much inflammatory swelling with a decided tendency toward the formation of pustules. They dry and form crusts of a dark-grayish color and of a fungoid appearance. The growths extend rapidly and become in the course of a few days confluent, forming a large diffused scab which is found when removed to cover an ulcerative surface. Simultaneous with this the lips become tumefied, swelling to two or three times their normal thickness. The appetite usually remains good, but the animals feed with difficulty owing to the sensitiveness of the affected parts. In some cases the scab extends from the lips up over the cheeks between the eyes, and at times a mucopurulent nasal discharge appears which adheres to the nostrils, and together with the swollen condition of the surrounding tissues causes a more or less complete occlusion of the air passages, resulting in labored breathing upon exercise.

(Concluded next week.)

How Sea Lions Capture Gulls.

The sea lion displays no little skill and cunning in capturing gulls. When in pursuit the sea lion dives deeply under water and swims some distance from where it disappeared; then, rising cautiously, it exposes the tip of its nose along the surface, at the same time giving it a rotary motion. The unwary bird nearby alights to catch the object, while the sea lion at the same moment settles beneath the waves and at one bound, with extended jaws, seizes its screaming prey and instantly devours it.

The Chair of Forgetfulness.

"What I want," said the fretful magnate, "is to find some way of forgetting my troubles."

"That's easy," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "Get them to put you in the witness chair during a trust investigation."

Undoubtedly one of the best lunches of the season was that given free, by the M. W. A., in the hall here on Friday evening. Although the floor was somewhat crowded during the forepart of the evening, it was occupied by a jolly, congenial party whom we believe were well entertained by the fraternal order—however, all express themselves to that effect.
