Worse Than Losing Money.
A new form of freak election bet is detailed in the following story from a Bitter, Utah, correspondent of the Chicago Chronicle:

"Jules Verna Hall, the famous globe trotter, in order to pay an election bet must refrain from talking during the next three months. Violation of the agreement means a loss of $2,500 posted as a forfeit."

"Twice during the last four days has Hall been within an ace of losing. On Wednesday night while absent mindedly gazing across the sage brush an enemy carelessly inquired: 'Will you have a drink?'"

"The word 'Yes' was on his lips, when Hall with a powerful effort restrained himself and merely nodded assent. Then an argument was started as to the relative merits of the English and Russian navies. Hall is a native of the British Isles and when everyone present agreed that Rojestvensky could have defeated the English home fleet, poor Hall spluttered until he grew red in the face."

"The doors were locked and he could not escape, so to save his $2,500 he gagged himself with a blanket. He is suffering as few men have suffered. Because he dare not speak he has been living on ham and beans, and he cannot protest when his companions lock him outside the cabin."

SETTLED SMART YOUNG MAN.
"Camp-Meeting John's" Smart Answer to Filippant Question.

Camp-meeting John Allen, the grandfather of Madame Nordica, was for many years a picturesque figure among the Methodist ministers in the state of Maine. A mania for attending camp-meetings was not his only distinction. He was a good deal of a wag, and his utterances were much appreciated by both saint and sinner.

At one time, having gone to Lewiston to attend a quarterly meeting, he was approached in the street by several young men who were evidently out for a good time.

"Camp-meeting John," said the spokesman, "who was the devil's grandmother?"

"The devil's grandmother," replied the old man in the quick, sharp tone so characteristic of his speech, "the devil's grandmother—how do you expect me to keep your family record?"
