BEAUTY AT A BOAT RACE.

Handkerchiefs, Gloves, Caramels and Ice Cream Lost On a Steamboat Struggle.

"This lays way over steamboat racing on the Mississippi before the war!" shouted an excited Southerner on the upper deck of the "Magenta" as her opening paddles churned the waters of the bay into suds of salt foam recently, says the New York Journal.

A hoarse yell of defiance from a red-faced passenger as he leaned over the taffrail of the "D. R. Martin," which was tearing through the chopping seas within pistol shot of the "Magenta" and parallel to her course, evoked a challenging yell from the Southerner.

Five minutes before, as the clock in the pilot house indicated 8:15 a. m., the "Magenta," the fastest steamer of Erastus Wiman's Staten Island line, had hastily cast off from the pier at New Brighton, as the "Martin," John H. Starin's crack boat, came rushing up the Kill Von Kull on her morning trip to New York.

"A race, a race!" was the cry that rung from the bow of the "Magenta" to her stern and everybody crowded to the side of the vessel nearest the rival steamer. Men half asleep over a morning paper roused themselves and leaped to their feet.

A knot of Staten Island belles in the ladies' cabin of the "Magenta" had settled down for a little gossip over a prospective day's shopping, but hearing the word "race," they gave a chorus of ecstatic screams and in an instant each curtained cabin window was a frame for three or four flushed and pretty faces.

"The 'Martin' is gaining," screamed a nervous little blonde in a heavenly blue bonnet, and then she added in a tone of resignation, "Whatever I have anything to do with is always unlucky. I'll bet the 'Magenta' is beaten."

"I'll bet five plates of ice cream that she won't be," rejoined the black-eyed young wife of a produce exchange operator, who had instilled in her mind the silent principles of speculation in futures, whether by land or sea.

"It's a go, if you make the five creams for August delivery," mischievously suggested the first speaker, after having peeped into her purse and found that as usual she had started to shop without money.

"I tell you what to do. Put up a margin of five cents on every plate to allow for a possible corner in ice, and I won't call on you for delivery until the first of August," gleefully exclaimed the pretty brunette, and she rushed to deck as mingled cheers and groans were heard from the upper deck.

Both boats were now fully under way. The Magenta trembled from keel to pilot-house, where the man at the wheel, catching the infectious spirit of the race, rang for the engineer to go ahead at full speed, and the steam whistle shrieked a strident challenge to the Martin. An answering blast from the Martin visibly threw her passengers into greater excitement, and they laughed in scorn as they hailed the Magenta, which was falling slowly behind.

In rounding Robbin's reef Starin's white and speedy craft was over two lengths ahead, and the ladies on board the Magenta became correspondingly depressed.

"Hope and ice cream deferred maketh the heart sick," sagely soliloquized Miss Belle Turner, of Brooklyn, as she tried to comfort the sunny-haired backer of the New Brighton boat, whose blue eyes dimmed with tears of mortification.

Four miles of shining water stretched ahead over which the course of the rival steamers lay parallel to Bedloe's island, where the race must practically end, as one boat must go up the North river and the other to her berth at the east of the Battery.

"Two pairs of movsquetaires to one pair of Sara Bernhardts that the Magenta wins," boldly challenged the pretty daughter of a sedate Wall street broker, as the gale caught the fluttering crimson feather in her hat and sent it flying like a flamingo into the water.

"This knocks poker out of time," said a young member of the New York club, who dabbles in oil to pay his living expenses on Staten Island. "I believe that this race is a job put up by Starin and Wimen to draw the custom of Wall street men, whose natural instincts lean toward buying pools on such a race as this."

"Bosh!" replied one of the Exchange place bears; "what do Wiman or Starin want to run the risk of a boiler explosion for? Great Scott! what's that!" and the man jumped three feet, striking his head against the deck above.

"Ha, ha!" laughed his companion, "we are only letting off steam. You ought to be thrown overboard for talking about explosions."

In just twenty-three minutes from the start from New Brighton the race was ended. The "Martin" was apparently unable to hold her steam for so long a time at high speed, and the "Magenta's" more capacious boilers brought her a victor off Bedloe's Island by two lengths.

"Hurrah for the 'Magenta!'" was the cheer that swelled musically from a score of white throats, and the ladies laughingly went ashore a few moments later. Many plates of ice cream, boxes of caramels and even five dollar bills were lost or won by the fair passengers from Staten Island.

JEWISH CONSCRIPTS.

Devices Adopted to Escape From Military Service.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the London Times writes: "A very curious note appears in the newspapers in connection with the Finnish troops and the Jewish question to the effect that Jews who have to undergo their share of military service in Finland will be permitted to reside freely in the Grand Duchy until June 1st, 1886. How magnanimous of the government to permit its Hebrew subjects to perform their military duties to the Crown without let or hindrance, and then to reward them, when no longer required, by ignominious restrictions and expulsion. The Jews naturally appreciate this unfair exchange to the full, and do their best to evade military service altogether. It is a significant fact that in the last conscription nearly 16,000 Jews failed to put in an appearance in their various districts, or more than 50 per cent. of the whole number of those who evaded the law. The Bashkirs and Tartars, to say nothing of sectarians like the Mennonites, for instance, are also much complained of for using various means, such as injuring their fingers and lessening the measurement of the chest, in order to escape military service. A number of Bashkirs have been brought to account for reducing the size of their chests by semi-starvation and other tricks, and thus obtaining medical certificates of exemption. In Russia a conscript is rejected by the doctors if his chest does not measure at least half the length of his stature. In one quarter only of a small district there were 150 men disqualified on this account out of 500, which fact led to a strict investigation. It was found several months afterward, that those rejected had quite recovered their normal healthy condition, and measured even more than was necessary round the chest."

COLONEL LAMONT.

Wonderful Influence of the President's Private Secretary.

Mr. Bayard is the Premier, nominally, of the Administration. But he hasn't a tithe of Lamont's influence. Nor has any man in the Cabinet. The private Secretary is virtually a member of the Cabinet—if he is not more; if he is not at the head of the Cabinet he is ahead of it in point of opportunity. He is with the President constantly outside of office hours—riding, walking, smoking and chatting. The two are as intimate as brothers, and more so than most brothers. Now, all of this is in no wise discreditable to either Lamont or the President. But it is a little surprising to Democrats of all grades, and especially to members of the Cabinet.

Lamont, as you see him, has not the appearance of a great man. Senators and members who want the President to make an appointment for them take good care not to offend the Private Secretary. In ordinary life they might not remember to recognize him after the first introduction. But this isn't safe for a political leader now. A step or two from Lamont's desk is a door opening into the Cabinet chamber, and so connecting with the library, the President's business office. Senators and members long ago caught on to the trick of going to see Lamont, and stepping in to have a word with the President, thus avoiding the doorkeeper, who takes the visitor's card and keeps it for the scrutiny of the newspaper men. The manner of the private secretary is modest and quiet. He talks less than the President to his callers, and listens with close attention to all that is said to him. Between the two, the President and the secretary, the rascals are likely to be found out if their stories do not hang together. It was discovered long ago by the politicians that the two men talked these matters over.

Soon after dusk you can see Col. Vilas with a big bundle of papers, Mr. Bayard, Mr. Lamar, Mr. Manning, or Attorney-General Garland step in quietly and alone, and pass quickly up the stairs to the President's room. Lamont is welcome at all times. With the exception of Whitney and Manning, there isn't a member of the Cabinet whose recommendations are not revised by Lamont. The fact is a curious one and worth notice and study. Lamont's rise in opportunities is no more or less phenomenal than Mr. Cleveland's advance from his Buffalo law office to the White House. From a newspaper reporter—a good one, mind you, with a keen scent for coming events and judicious in every use of his information—Lamont has slipped in between the historic lines of this first Democratic Administration since the war—an advent that is destined to grow in wonder as time goes on.

Innocent of the Grave Crime.

In an Arkansas town, several nights ago, a mob, led by a desperate man, marched to the jail, dragged a murderer from a cell, and hurried him to the outskirts of the town. Each man wore an expression of determination—features hardened by awful resolve. The prisoner attempted to speak, to beg for his life, but the burly hands closed around his throat, and the prayer he would have uttered went out in an inarticulate gurgle.

When the infuriate men reached a large oak they halted. One of them threw a rope over a limb.

"Gentlemen," said the prisoner, "please give me a chance to say a word."

"Be quick about it," some one shouted.

"Gentlemen, I admit that the evidence is against me, but, as truly as we stand here, I killed that man in self-defense."

"Killed what man?" was asked.

"Bill Bottleford."

"You ain't the man that killed Bottleford, are you?"

"Yes, unfortunately, I am the man."

"Men," shouted the leader, "we have come within one of making a terrible mistake." Then, turning to the prisoner, the leader added: "We thought, sir, that you were the man that stole Nate Boyd's fish trap. Hop down offen the box. You are free."—Arkansas Traveler.

Women on Wheels.

Tricycling is a good thing for city women, in the opinion of the Cleveland Plain Dealer. It serves to bring rural nature nearer their vision, health to the doors of their lungs, and pleasurable work, called exercise by courtesy, to their hands. But the tricycle has some side advantages that recommend it to all who wish women well. I suspect the majority are men. Women still dress abominably. They look well. They cannot, as a whole, do less in any or no costume. But they dress unhealthily, unseasonably, and uncomfortably. A tricycle-riding woman must turn her attention to dress reform. The present voluminous skirts will strike her as cumbrous and in the way; she must wear sensible underclothing, and corsets must be discarded. Here are three small reforms which, if universally instituted, would reduce the death rate ten per thousand among women.
