

MURDERER LEASIA CAPTURED

In Company With His Divorced Wife, Whom He Had Forced to Go Along With Him, the Slayer of Drews Was Found in a Barn.

PORTLAND, Ore., May 26.—M. V. Leasia, who murdered his father-in-law, F. H. Drews, Sunday, and then fled, taking his divorced wife along as an unwilling companion, was captured at 5 o'clock this morning in a barn about four miles from this city. The couple were sleeping in a barn on the Paulson farm, where late last night they had eaten supper, when the posse headed by Captain of Detectives James Simmons came upon them. It was the work of a minute to secure and disarm the murderer. The couple were exhausted from their flight, and exposure, and when they entered the barn to take a short rest, sleep overcame them, and resulted in the capture of the murderer and the rescuing of his captive wife.

Leasia Wounded. When taken to the city jail today it was found that Leasia was wounded over the heart. He stated that his father-in-law, F. H. Drews, shot him on Sunday morning, but Mrs. Leasia tells a different story. She says that she shot her former husband after he had shot her father. Mrs. Leasia said:

BURNED ITSELF OUT. One Hundred Buildings Destroyed by Fire at Laocoma, N. H.

Laocoma, N. H., May 25.—Nearly 100 buildings have been burned, 250 persons are homeless and a loss of between $250,000 and $300,000 is estimated by a fire in the Laocoma section, the area burned over being about 150 acres. The fire started in a building of the H. H. Wood hosiery mill. The flames spread quickly and in a very short time, under the influence of a brisk southeast wind, the entire structure was burning. Next it spread to the finished lumber plant of the Boulla & Gorrell company and then to the works of the Laocoma Electric light company. In less than an hour both these plants were destroyed. The city fire department was helpless to stay the progress of the fire, and the destruction went on until the fire actually burned itself out for want of material.

IT WOULDN'T WORK. An Annoying Variation of That Servant Girl Question.

"I am from the best commonwealth in the whole wide world," responded the third. "Pennsylvania is pretty good in some respects, and so is New York, but I am from the best section of the Lord's footstool. I am from the state that raises people who know how to do things, and the human mechanism that operates great industries and makes the world as well as dependent on the food supply of the human race. None of your states could get along without me. The industries of the country would languish, and the human endeavor would cease and the world would be at a standstill and the people thereof passed into a state of starvation. Now, you know not. Why? Simply because the workers are the real support of every enterprise, and the human mechanism that operates great industries must have food. The people that raise the food of the United States, and the entire world as well as dependent on the food supply of the human race, are the people from the agricultural districts. I am from the state that raises more food than any other state on the earth, and if it wasn't for my state the rest of the states would be practically dead, and the human mechanism that operates great industries would cease to exist. Where are you from?" to the fifth.

The Vain Young Woman. (A. C. Stuart in St. Joseph Gazette.) It was about 8 when she tumbled from bed.

And she took a good look at her face. Her hair was most terribly mussed on her head.

But she took a good look at her face. And when she was dressed and was combing her hair.

And when she was dressed and was combing her hair. Each time that she thought to herself: "I am fair."

Why! She took a good look at her face. When fixed for a plunge with the shoppers, she stood.

And then, on the street car, she found that she could— So she took a good look at her face.

She hurried around. When she finished the day— Why! She took a good look at her face.

She adjusted the dress she wore—by the way— When she took a good look at her face.

Her powder she deemed it was needed— that's right! And she used it quite often 'twixt morning and night—

When through with the day and prepared for repose— Why! She took a good look at her face.

She smeared it with glycerine—water of rose— As she took a good look at her face.

She put on her "nightie" and scurried about— And then to be certain—no have any doubt— The very last thing ere the light was put out— Why! She took a good look at her face.

And she took a good look at her face. To San Francisco, Portland and Spokane. Via Oregon Short Line.

NEW YORK FREAK DINNERS. Some Famous Dizzy Society Affairs on Manhattan Island.

This is the era of freak dinners, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. Fine food is not enough for New York's epicureans. The multiplied courses must be served in a freakish, if not barbaric, manner. Society has its own way of doing things here. The music of popping champagne corks is no longer enough.

The Parade. The president's ride through the city was concluded with the triumphal procession down Riverside, the principal street of the city. The broad avenue was beautifully decorated with the national colors.

An Interesting Feature. One especially interesting feature of Roosevelt's visit to Spokane took place at the site of the new Masonic temple.

Changes in Programme. Two changes were made in the programme at Spokane. Ex-Senator Turner gave his seat, at the request of Secretary of the Interior, to Governor McBride.

The Problem Solved. (Baltimore American.) Once upon a time there lived a woman whose face was a fright.

Her eyes were not mates. And neither was her nose. Her mouth was a misfit, cut on the bias, and her chin was perennially absent.

Her skin resembled that of the light-brown spots on a Mexican dog, and her color was much more ruddy than that of a brickbat.

She had read assiduously all the information she could get on the how-to-beautiful.

She had sent her good money to the beauty doctors every where. The result was that she didn't grow homelier was that in constructing her originally nature had aimed at the limit and hit the bull's-eye.

When she was looking along the road toward her home when she saw that the floods had undermined a railway bridge.

It was raining at her watch, she found that it wasn't running.

But the trains were. She heard a faint whistle in the distance and knew at once that it was the lightning express.

Seeing the determination in her face, and fearing she might use her hatpin on the locomotive if he didn't stop, the engineer pulled the brakes and the reverser lever and stopped.

When it became known that she had saved the train and perhaps the lives of many persons, she was a heroine.
