THE PRIMARY ELECTION

So far as the campaign for the Primary election is concerned, it is practically over. Today is election day. Nearly every voter has made up his mind as to his choice of candidates.

The campaign so far has been conducted in a clean, gentlemanly way. Some few inuendoes have been thrown at the present administration by certain of the candidates who are not in sympathy with some of the extravagant policies which have characterized the administration.

There is not enough polygamy to hurt, and long before Helen marries and settles down, it will have passed entirely into history. But there are harems for her disturbing, and she can reach them on the trolley cars from any point in Galesburg.

THE NEW CURRENCY BILL

The Missouri Valley Farmer thinks the President's new currency bill the work of a "master politician." It looks upon it as "carrying the centralization of power to the limit and to be contrary to the fundamental principles of democracy."

Whatever you may think of the new currency bill, it must be conceded a master politician had to do with its construction.

In the first place it throws a sop to the old-time Populist by making the new currency to be issued a government currency. He believed that it is the function of the government to issue all of the money and in this bill he believes that he has at least gained a point by getting a law that requires the government to print and distribute the currency to the banks.

This still leaves the objection that the control of the banks and through them the business of the country will be centered in a board of seven men, all of them appointed by the president.

The bill gives to this board a greater power than that possessed by any other board in the United States. If this power is honestly and wisely used no harm will result.

Well after all turning the entire control of banks over to seven men appointed by the President is going some isn't it? Would not that be some machine? Well, rather.

REFORMATION FAR AFIELD

Helen L. Wood of Chicago, who could not get a husband if she had a net, and a gun, a lariat and a spongeful of chloroform—but who would be a heap quiter if she had one—declares at Galesburg, Illinois, that the W. C. T. U. "will never rest as long as there are any harems of the Mormon sect remaining."

Helen is gunning for cripples when there is good game nearer home. There are not any "harems of the Mormon sect," and never have been. There were plural marriages among the Mormons, but the harem character did not attach.

In Illinois there are more men confessing one wife and supporting two than ever have been in Utah. And Helen's activities are in part supported by the contributions she knows come from them.

It may be popular but it is not honest to do all your reforming away from home.—Goodwin's Weekly.

SMARTING OVER BLUNDER

The following is the latest from the Salt Lake Tribune:

The Logan Republican grumbles because The Tribune welcomes Cache county (among other) people "as good friends in general and especially as good friends in trade."

Conference visitors are welcomed to Salt Lake to buy in the cheapest market, the one which affords the greatest variety of choice and the fullest supply of all things needful, those articles of merchandise which they stand in need of at home, and are not able to buy to as good advantage in their home communities.

THE CURRENCY BILL

It would appear that in the suggested changes, and in the questions at issue between the bankers and the lenders of the dominant party there is nothing which is not open to honest differences of opinion.

est differences of opinion. The bankers have accepted many features of the measure, and it is by no means impossible for the Administration and the financial interests to agree on others and thus bring to pass a much desired measure of currency reform.

THE DISAPPOINTED

There are songs enough for the hero, Who dwells on the heights of fame, I sing for the disappointed— For those who have missed their aim.

I sing with a tearful cadence, For one who stands in the dark, And knows that his last best arrow, Has bounded back from the mark.

I sing for the breathless runner, The eager, anxious soul, Who falls with strength exhausted, Almost in sight of the goal.

For the hearts that break in silence, With a sorrow all unknown; For those who need companions, Yet walk their way alone.

There are songs enough for the lovers Who share love's tender pain; I sing for the one whose passion, Is given all in vain.

For those whose spirit comrades Have missed them on the way, I sing, with a heart o'erflowing, This minor strain today.

And I know the Solar System, Must somewhere keep in space, A prize for that spent runner, Who barely lost the race.

For the pain would be imperfect, Unless it held some sphere, That paid for the toll and talent, And love that are wasted here.

THE MAN WITH A PULL

He boasts not a high education, Nor useless collegiate degrees, His promotion to honor and station Was gained without either of these. Ye savants and classical scholars, Of science and learning chock full, Stand aside from his shower of dollars.

He owns the whole district he lives in— This prominent person of weight, His party he always believes in. Provided it pays all the freight. His knowledge is not so extensive, His clothes are the best all wool, And his living is high and expensive, Because he is the man with a "pull."

He's not very strong on orations, Of such he has no time to think, Save when he suggests 'tween politicians, "Step up to the bar, boys and drink I'll need all yer help next election To carry this district in fall, Then I'll fix every wan to perfection"— And they cheer for the man with a "pull."

Are you out of a job?—to procure it, No matter in daylight or dark, A bit of a note will secure it With this gentleman's name and his mark. At night he plays poker and faro And shoots what is known as "the bull." He is surely New York's local "hayro"— The popular man with a "pull."
