Isabella Morris Narrowly Escapes Being Murdered.

ASSAULTED BY J. LEWIS

The Victim Thrown Down in a Deserted Alley and Severely Used.

POLICEMAN ROBLES' CAPTURE.

Heard the Struggle in the Dark and Succeeded in Arresting the Offender.

Another supposed strangler is behind the bars of the City Prison, and unlike those who have preceded him he is in a measure self-confessed and was also caught in the very act of throttling a woman of the half world in a dark and deserted alley off Montgomery street, near Washington.

It was at an early hour this morning when the crime was committed, and at that time, the electric lights being out, it was dark as pitch.

Officer F. Robl, who patrols Montgomery street, was walking along his beat, when he was startled upon reaching Merchant alley, to hear the gurgling sound of a strangling human being. His mind being full of the recent outrageous murders, he quickly arrived at the conclusion that another helpless woman was being assassinated and rushed up the allev. Just as he reached the center of the block, he heard a man's voice cry out: "If you cry, I will strangle you to death as I did the other notorious women of your

This spurred him on in his search and finally he spied a large man with his fingers clutched around the throat of a woman who was prostrate on the pavement.

The would-be assassin and the officer saw each other at the same time and the former released his hold on his victim and sprang as if to escape, but Robl was too quick for him and soon had him safely ironed.

The woman then got up and both were started for the California-street Police Station. On reaching the light it was observed that the victim of the assault was a young colored woman.

When they reached the station a mes senger was dispatched for Detective Ben Bohen and in the meantime the man was charged with battery. He gave the name of John Lewis and said that he was an iron-molder by occupation. He failed. however, to explain the motive which led him to assault and nearly murder the young colored woman.

When Detective Bohen arrived the girl told her story. She said her name is Isabella Morris and that she lives in Hinckley alley. "I was going through Merchant street," she said, "in order to Merchant street, "she said, "in order to buy some medicine at a drugstore on Montgomery street, near Clay. As I reached the center of the block the prisoner jumped on me and threw me to the ground. He grasped my throat with one hand and placed the other over my mouth to prevent me from making an outcry.

"To add to my terror he kept cautioning me not to make an outcry, as he said that in event I did he would strangle me to death as he had strangled several other girls of my class during the last five months. This failed to silence me, how-he will be held pending a lengthy investigation. In any event he will be convicted of assault and battery, and while he is serving his sentence the detectives will have ample time to look up his record.

"A Foggy Morning in the Oaks," "An Opening in the Forest" and "Sunset," the last representing the glow of evening glinting upon an autumnal scene tinging the foliage with fantastic hues. These were the best efforts of the month, not devoid of merit, and remarkably similar to some of Keith's pictures. But the second month's rent upset the ambitious young artist's nerves. beauty lately purchased by C. P. Huntington.

As the story goes, Keith dropped into the artstore the other day. The first thing his eye met was this picture, and then beside it were the copies of Mersfelder's, all looking so nearly alike that the uninitiated might easily believe the one artist painted the entire lot. The master of landscape went wild at the sight and angry words followed, with the result that the dealer and he are friends no more.

"The pictures were like peas in a pod,"

The Meteoric Jules Mersfelder Proved a Clever Imitator.

SIDE BY SIDE IN A STORE.

Keith Went Wild and the Artists Grinned-Eccentricities of the Young Painter.

Something has happened in art circles in this City to disturb the even temper of William Keith and to set the artists all alaughing. Gossip of the studio has it that the eminent landscape painter is furious and indignant. At the same time the artists draw mental pictures of Keith in his gallery on Pine street tearing out his hair and fuming all about the oriental carpets. And the innocent cause of it all-Jules Mersfelder, votary of what he used to call the "quality school," is far, far away.

Mersfelder's meteoric career went out in San Francisco quite recently. His fading away from the local artistic firmament contained a pathetic story hidden beneath the surface, and, unconsciously, it was accompanied by a little transaction which ruffled the lofty soul of his beau ideal-Keith. Bringing the subject down to the present, there are paintings by Mersfelder and Keith side by side in a Geary-street art store, and only competent judges of an artist explained when laughing with fellow-painters over the story.

Mersfelder vanished from the City immediately after selling his pictures. He met Chris Jorgensen on the Sacramento train, and confided to him that he was going to his only friend in New York. The artists and connoisseurs here had conspired against him, so he declared. Whereat he wept bitter tears. He had a ticket to Sacramento, and appeared in stylish attire.

whereat he wept bitter tears. He had a ticket to Sacramento, and appeared in stylish attire.

And now a story comes from Sacramento of a wonderful dash made there by the impressionist artist. It was told in Chris Jorgensen's class at the capital. According to it Mersfelder went to the best hotel in town and gave out that he was there on a contract with Mrs. Crocker to paint some great historical picture. Anyhow, he got the best apartments in the notel, and set the place by the ears with language that passed through his sombrero. He put on tremendous airs, and talked big things about art, and Mrs. Crocker's order in particular, till at last the people imagined that Raphael had come back again to earth and somehow alighted in Sacramento. This did not last long, however, for Mersfelder had to subdue his soaring fancies abruptly. The latest account is he lost himself somewhere at the other side of the Capital city.

SYMBOLIC OF SUCCESS.

WILL BE THE MAIN ENTRANCE.

Designed by C. E. Hodges, and to Be Completed Before Commencement Day.

As a fitting monument to Mrs. Stanford's ultimate triumph in the great Government suit for $15,000,000, a beautiful gateway is being erected at the main entrance to the university campus.

It is the first substantial building in keeping with the original designs of the extensive quadrangle group that has been attempted since the death of Senator Stanford nearly three years ago; for soon after that the estate became involved in the litigation that barred all its sources of revenue and left the university dependent solely upon Mrs. Stanford's private for-tune for its necessary expenses, amounting to nearly $1000 a day.

Each gatepost is formed of rough-hewn yellow sandstone blocks, with four stone pillars at the corners, and on the top of this substantial pile is to be a solid block of stone as a pedestal for a bronze Egyptian sphinx that will surmount the whole and of stone as a pedestal for a bronze Egyptian sphinx that will surmount the whole and make the top of the gatepost fully eighteen feet above the ground.

From the accompanying sketch, made from the designs of Charles Edward Hodges, the university architect, may be gained a good idea of the general appearance of the whole structure, which will be completed about May 13.

Mr. Hodges is also authority for the statement that the long-expected and much-neded large auditorium or hall for popular lectures will probably soon be built.
