ANIMALCULAE IN ITS

All of Which Means That

of Chicken Pox

BERKELEY, March 6.—A zoological paper, written by Dr. Clifford D. Sweet, graduate of last May, which is said to be an invaluable contribution to the meager knowledge concerning the numerous malignant diseases caused not by bacteria but by protozoa has been published by the University of California.

The brochure details the experiments and results of a study which Doctor Sweet made in rump and chicken pox in fowls.

The first important result made by the student was to prove that rump and the pox are two distinct diseases, not as eminent German scientists have reported, variants of the same disease.

PATHOLOGICAL IMPORTANCE
Pathologically, the work is of high importance, according to the university zoologists, because it casts light on the treatment by inoculation of all protozoic diseases. The protozoa are frequently so minute as to be invisible to the most powerful microscope. Bacteria may be eliminated from fluids through porcelain filter but Doctor Sweet has ascertained that fluid infected with protozoa is still virulent after filtration, proving that the minute animal parasites pass through the exceedingly fine pores of porcelain.

ELUSIVE ANIMALCULAE
The nature of the animalculae is such that Doctor Sweet adopted the "component fixation reaction" test. Developing a method of immunizing poultry against chicken pox, he has, it is hoped, pointed the way toward developing inoculation against human protozoic disease. It is known that malaria and sleeping sickness are caused by protozoa, introduced into the body by the bites of insects. Medical science presumes that other protozoic diseases are smallpox, rabies and infantile paralysis. The organisms responsible for those diseases have never been discovered.

The immediate positive result of Doctor Sweet's experiments has been to prove the infective relation of the immunized chicken to the disease of poultry, chicken pox. That is, he has demonstrated that a fowl which has once had the disease and recovered is thereafter immune.

INOCULATION IMMUNITIES
Also he has shown that inoculation established this immunity, the blood of the inoculated bird producing a specific substance which counteracts or dissolves the parasites.

Experimentations were conducted under the direction of Dr. C. M. Haring, assistant professor of veterinary science, and Dr. C. A. Kofoid, professor of zoology at the university.

BOON TO POULTRYMEN
That the discoveries may be of the greatest possible value to the California poultry grower, the university has issued for their guidance instructions for safeguarding against the diseases. Quarantine methods absolutely prevent the disease. Disinfection of yards and outhouses where diseased chickens have been is necessary, as the parasites are active after five years under stringent conditions. Flocks of chickens should not exceed 25 to 30 in number. At the university farm at Davis the general principles are exemplified, no fowl there being diseased in any way.

Platted and Placed on the Market

RICHMOND, March 6.—E. N. Tapscott has closed a deal with the Realty Syndicate for 200 acres of land, the consideration being something over $400,000.

The property lies along San Pablo avenue, beginning at the junction of Cutting boulevard and extending past Macdonald avenue. It is considered one of the most valuable pieces of realty in the vicinity of Richmond.

Mr. Tapscott will immediately subdivide the property and put it on the market for homesites.

The tract will be known as "Richmond Junction," and will be what the term "junction" implies. It is the converging point for three great arteries of travel, and has a superior location and picturesque surroundings, and has advantages as a commercial center.

Mr. Tapscott is well known here for other large deals in land. He has been operating in Alameda county for many years, and is the largest individual owner of lots in either this or Contra Costa county.

Mrs. Ida Locke Brings Suit for Divorce on Peculiar Grounds

Troubles of the Clarks Again to Be Aired in the Courts

OAKLAND, March 6.—To sing and dance and toss her baby in the air was the impulse Mrs. Ida Locke derived of Hungarian parentage, but this was sternly repressed by A. C. F. Locke and made the basis for her suit for divorce in Judge Brown's court today.

"Always my husband said I must not sing," said Mrs. Locke, her face taking on a serious look, "and when I could not sing he would not talk. Days at a time I had no word from my husband."

"Mr. Locke was cranky when company was there," said Miss Georgetown Szoke, a little sister of Mrs. Locke, "He would not speak to her often for days at a time. He would not buy clothes for her."

"My daughter was unhappy from the first day of her marriage," said Mrs. Ida Szoke, mother of the plaintiff, "and she had no clothes. New gowns I must make her from old ones, as her husband gave her nothing to wear. Once I took her away with me then Mr. Locke would not talk with her for three days as she came back."

Judge Brown continued the case one week to permit of Locke introducing witnesses in his defense.

Mrs. Ivy Mae Clark filed suit for divorce against Dr. J. Emmet Clark today charging desertion. The action is a new phase of their contest of last year when Judge Ogden refused to grant either a divorce on Doctor Clark's initial suit. Mrs. Clark stated that her husband went to Sacramento and refused to permit her to join him.

Mary E. Fornoe sued for divorce from Axel S. Fornoe today alleging that he took another woman for a ride on his motorbike and slapped his wife's face twice a week beside calling names.

Desertion was alleged in divorce actions filed today by Alfred Williams against Maude L. Williams, and by Frederick Dering against Anna Dering. An interlocutory decree was given Mrs. M. Simons from Siegfried Simons.

SEARCH FOR WILL IS VAIN

Eight Weeks' Continuance Granted in Martins' Case

OAKLAND, March 6.—Mrs. Anna C. Martins has convinced Judge F. B. Ogden that it would be to her interest to find the will of her late husband, A. M. Martins.

A citation directing Mrs. Martins to produce a box said to have contained the will has been dismissed. Eight weeks' continuance has been ordered in the hope that others may find the will. An attorney representing parents of Martins who live in the Azores islands had the citation issued against Mrs. Martins.

Attacks Brother's Will

OAKLAND, March 6.—August H. Lauenstein, accused his sister, Mrs. Mary L. Riley, of using undue influence to force Albert E. Lauenstein, their brother, to leave her a large estate valued at $20,000 in his will. Albert Lauenstein died August 20 of last year and his will was filed for probate August 28.

He left no children, and his heirs at law were said to be his brother, August H. Lauenstein, Louis A. and Robert A. Lauenstein, and his sisters, Mrs. Riley, Iowa Landis and Louisa F. Stahl. That Lauenstein for some time before his death, while in a weakened condition, was dominated by Mrs. Riley was charged today in the attack on the will.
