WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

The story opens with Rives, who is in charge of the technical workings of the great tunnel from America to Germany, on one of the tunnel trains, with Baermann, an engineer, in charge of main station No. 4. They are traveling at the rate of 118 miles an hour. Rives is in love with Maude Allan, wife of MacKendrick Allan, whose mind first conceived the great tunnel scheme. After going about 50 miles under the Atlantic ocean Rives gets out of the train. Suddenly the tunnel seems to burst. There is a frightful explosion. Men are flung to death and Rives is hadly wounded. He hears some one calling his name as he staggers through the blinding smoke, realizing that about 3.000 men have probably perished. He and other survivors get to station No. 4. Rives finds Baermann holding at bay a wild mob of frantic men who want to climb on a work train. Somebody shoots Baerraann and the train sides out. The scene is then changed to the roof of the Hotel Atlantic. The greatest financiers of the country are gathered there at a summons from C. H. Lloyd, "The Money King." John Rives addresses them and introduces Allan. He tells them that he can build a tunnel under the Atlantic from the New Jersey shore vin the Bermudas and Asores to England. The financiers discuss undertaking the project and their decision is clinched by a speech made by Helen Lloyd, daughter of the "Money King." Allan selects Rives as his chief Heutenant and work is started on the tunnel, the approach to be a hole 12 miles deep. Allan is so engrossed with his work that he neglects his wife, who, consequently, is thrown into Rives' society. He is involved in the financing as well as the engineering problems of his undertaking. Ethel Lloyd ealis on Mrs. Allan at Tunnel City and, the wife wonders to what extent her husband is interested in this competent young woman. Mrs. Allan (aud) and Rives dine together, alone. They discover suddenly that they love each other. Rives leaves her to go back to the tunnel. The next morning Tunnel City is aroused

This was the first sensation. The wecond, to those who understood the tunnel situation, was even more important. The first offer of ball came from Lloyd, personally. The fact had hardly become known when the receiver of the syndicate also offered to become a bondsman. The public was amazed. It was a right about to become a bondsman. The public was amazed. It was a right about face for the tunnel masters. They had for months given every indication that they intended throwing Allan to the wolves, and the moment he was about to be crushed they were first to come to his aid.

"I was, of course, aware that unforeseen difficulties might arise," he said slowly. "I knew that under case and solve the said slowly. "I knew that under case and solve the said slowly." I knew that under case and solve the said slowly. "I knew that under case and solve the said slowly." I knew that under case and solve the court impassively.

they had fully intended to adhere to the original course and let Allan sink. Even Lloyd felt that it would be best to elliminate him. He never allowed personal likings or obligations to weigh against a business necessity. But the great financier reckoned without his daughter, now a woman of past 30, and the one human being that he feared. In one evening's talk she had forced her father into his reversal of position on the tunnel builder, and, of course, the others had to follow his lead.

But Allan declined bail. He explained that he was not ungrateful, but that he would find more rest and quiet in the city prison than anywhere else in the state, and he had a lot of work to do, he said. All the time he was awaiting trial he worked on his plan to drive a single gallery as a pathfinder for the completed tunnel.

world. Lloyd retained the best criminal lawyers he could find to defend the accused man, and six of the most powerful legal intellects in the world were ranged behind him in the battle against the machinery of justice.

Much of the testimony was too highly technical to be understood by the casual newspaper reader, but all of it was printed. Ethel Lloyd's picture appeared in the papers dozens of times. She did not miss an hour of the trial and followed every move with keen understanding.

The prosecution maintained that Allan had willfully and knowingly induced investors to part with their money on the assurance that the tunnel would be in successful and profitable operation within 15 years. It was now conceded that this was impossible. The state contended that Allan had known from the beginning that this was impossible, and it introduced plenty of expert and circumstantial evidence to back up its case.

The defense was that Allan had blanned to finish the tunnel in all went well."

"I do."

"Then, if you were not certain that you could finish the tunnel in 15 years. If you knew that you could not finish it in that time unless all the circumstances were faverable, why did you make the positive statement that you could do it?"

"I object!" shouted Mr. Sands, and Allan's entire array of counsel rose en masse behind him.

The court listened patiently while Mr. Sands argued for 10 minutes and fenced and snapped at the district attorney. Then:

"The question is perfectly proper," he ruled.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am 24, and am engaged to a young girl of 20. Now as we are to be married soon our parents would like to come to some understanding. "I suppose that had something to do with it," he admitted, in a low, even voice.

The district attorney threw a quick look of triumph about the court.

"The people rest," he said.

Mr. Sands instantly swept into a loud voiced redirect examination of the witness, but he could not get past the stumbling block of that first damaging admission that Allan had not been convinced that he could finish the tunnel within the time limit set; and the case went to the jury.

The jury was out three hours. It returned a verdict of guilty.
