MONDAY MORNING NOVEMBER 5, 1866.

Curious Occupations in Paris. A list was lately published, compiled from statistics of Paris trade, of a number of curious occupations and manufactures, supposed to be peculiar to Paris, although probably many of them are to be found in There are, however, a certain number of what are emphatically called 'Paris articles," of which that ingenious and "Paris articles," of which that ingenious and industrious city has the monopoly. Among these are the following: Twelve manufactu-rers of artificial eyes and eight of pastry-cooks' jackets, two makers of skates and forty corneutters, eighteen wholeaale mus-tard merchants, seven constructors of light-ning conductors, seven of speaking trumpets, and three bechive makers, eight manufactu-rers of wooden heads for barbers and bonnet makers, and three of corkserews, sixteen rers of wooden beaus for barbers and bonnet makers, and three of corkserews, sixteen dealers in vanilla and thirteen in leeches, forty-nine cutters of haros hair for the hatters and thirteen manufacturers of hel-mets and hatchets for sappers, nineteen horsedealers and fifteen makers of reeds for clarionets, bassoons and hautbois, thirteen muzzle-makers and four crutch-makers, eighteen gut workers and nine manufacturers eighteen gut workers and nine manufacturers of foot-warmers, and one breaker-up of carrisgos. None of these occupations, however, can compete, for singularity, with that of a young fellow who was lately taken before a Paris magistrate as a vagabond: "You have no occupation?" said the bench inquiringly. "Beg your worship's pardon," was the rejoinder, "I deal in bits of halter for the use of gentlemen as plays." There is a superstition that a bit of rope with which a man has been hanged, carried in the pocket, secures luck at cards.

Goot—AND BAD.—A curious application of electricity has been made in Paris, at the Porte St. Martin Theatre, in the celebrated spectacle "Les Parisiens a Londres." In one of the scenes a number of girls appear wearing light crowns, consisting of a fillet of metal which at certain moments is placed in communication with a galvanic battery. By means of wires invisible to the audience, a series of breaks are arranged in the course of the current, so that when contact is made with the battery a number of luminous points appear in the crown, giving it the appearappear in the crown, giving it the appearance of being studded with stars. According to the Droit, however, an accident took place one evening during the representation of this scene in consequence of the disarrangement of the wires, by which one of the untortunate dancers received the current unfortunate dancers received the current through her head, the shock being sufficiently violent to throw her to the ground.

A Good Record.—C. C. Fulton is editor of the Baltimore American. Before he was editor of that paper he had succeeded in establishing a reputation, as is shown from this extract from the Baltimore Sun of Sept. 15,

"At the September term the Judge of the Crimmal Court directed the name of Charles C. Fulton to be stricken from the Grand Jury, as a liar, and a man unworthy to serve on a grand jury."
