Religious Denominations Differ In Detail Only

"For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members of one another."—Rom. 12:4:5.

SCIENCE has proved that no two things in nature have been created exactly alike. No two individuals have ever been identical either in their physical or mental construction, and therefore, it is reasonable to assume that the Divine Creator intended that humanity should arrive at the truth through different processes of thinking and reasoning. Many different and divergent types of human nature make up mankind, yet back of all these differences in detail the ultimate goal remains the same. There are many religious denominations in the world today all putting forth their fullest effort for the same ultimate good; the interpretation of the will of Divine Providence and the application of these truths to individual life. The only difference between these denominational beliefs are minor details. Religious denominations and sects are the outcome of different types of human nature. Your process of reasoning may not coincide with the doctrine of all the churches, but you have the privilege of making your own church affiliation on the basis of your own belief.
