The Girl of the Orchard

Still more suspicious than this falsehood was the fact that he almost immediately remembered something that he had promised to do for Mrs. Witherspoon. He made this excuse for his departure, and a few minutes later I saw him hurrying away toward the strip of woodland that lay back of the house. He was not in search of Mrs. Witherspoon or upon any errand of hers. It did not comport with my honor to follow him, but he had directed my attention to the grove, which was more than large enough to afford room for both of us.

There stood Jimmy Lamoinne offering me a light.

I had come out with the intention of going down to the lake, but the wood upon the rising ground looked very inviting, and so, taking a different course from Jimmy's and a more leisurely pace, I ascended the gentle slope. I was almost within the shadow of the fine old trees when, turning a little to the right, I came suddenly into view of a white parasol with blue polka dots. There was a girl under it, and I stopped short. Immediately Mr. Trask jumped up from the far side of the parasol, sketchbook and pencil in hand, and hailed me by name. The sunshade dropped at that moment, and I had a glimpse of a dainty white gown adorned with blue ribbons and of a very effective hat—so effective, indeed, that I nearly fell over backward at the sight of it, for beyond possibility of question it was the one I had a picture of in my pocket. This was the more certain because I saw the hat before the lady turned her head—saw it precisely as the camera had caught it.

There was but an instant of time, yet it was quite enough. Then I saw the lady's face and recognized Miss Jones of St. Jo. She looked even prettier than when I had first seen her, and the gown she wore was certainly a miracle of sweet simplicity. As she rose to greet me I perceived that she also had been sketching, and I had already seen the "subject," who was no other than our landlady's niece, looking quite picturesque in her plain gray gown and the big sunbonnet, which seemed to be her favorite headgear.

"Good morning," she said, looking up at me without moving from the "pose." Trask laughed at her in a gently teasing fashion as he took a step or two toward her and put his sketch pad into her hands.

"You're a great model, Lucy Ann," he said. "I'm ashamed to have done no better."

She looked at the sketch with an eager, childish interest and seemed to enjoy holding it in her hands.

I saw this out of the corner of my eye, my main attention being given to Miss Jones. Positively this could not be Sibyl; there was not the slightest physical resemblance. Her manner vaguely reminded me of some one I had known, but surely not Sibyl, whose habitual embarrassment in youth must have left some trace upon her, and Miss Jones was perfectly at ease. I had been pursuing a phantom. The picture I had found unquestionably represented the girl before me. She and Sibyl must be friends, and thus the picture had come into our house.

It was both a disappointment and a relief. My thought of it was a strange mass of contradictions. I would have liked to find Sibyl, though I had come to Mrs. Witherspoon's to avoid doing so. I had given myself great uneasiness for fear that Sibyl would not be pretty, and here was the prettiest girl that I had seen in five years, yet I was glad she was not Sibyl.

While we talked there was a crackling in the underbrush and suddenly Jimmy Lamoinne burst forth in a great hurry. It must have been the surprise of his life when he saw me. A youth of ordinary resources would have been puzzled to account for his own presence there, and I think it was a notable triumph of his peculiar genius that he hesitated so short a time for a falsehood, scarcely long enough indeed to get his breath.

"Your aunt wants you," said he to Lucy Ann.

The girl rose with a quaint little sigh. It was pleasanter no doubt to sit there under the shade of the trees and be a model for a handsome young artist, pleasanter even to envy Miss Jones' beauty and pretty clothes and unattainable refinement of manner, than to toil in Mrs. Witherspoon's kitchen. I plied her with hearty sincerity, exercising therein a virtue not my own, for such merit is no more mine than is the money that I spend. I have them both from my father, and my real nature goes back to some selfish anthropoid that lived in a tree and was perfectly satisfied so long as he had coconuts enough to fill his own stomach.

"What! More cake?" exclaimed Trask, addressing Lucy Ann in a fine, cheery tone. "Really you mustn't make it so good. We eat it too fast. I advise you to make a nice soggy one this morning."

"I guess you don't know my aunt," said Lucy Ann.

"Miss Witherspoon," said I, removing my hat with reverence, "did you make the cake that we had with our ice cream last evening?"

It is a great thing to mean what you say. If I had not vitally believed that that cake was the best ever baked since the world began, I could not have pleased this poor child. She would have seen straight through me. As it was, she gave me a quick glance of gratitude.

"Yes," said she. "I made it."

"Lucy Ann makes all the cake," said Trask. "She is an incomparable artist."

"In that case," said I, "it is fitting that I should carry my hat in my hand all the way back to the house—that is, if Miss Witherspoon will let me walk with her."

Without waiting for a reply I said good morning to Miss Jones and Trask, and grinned at Jimmy so that he might know that I was deliberately withdrawing in order to give him a chance to deliver his message about the picture. It was a great and rare pleasure to observe that he was disconcerted.

"Did you ever see the like of Jimmy Lamoinne?" said I to Lucy Ann when we were out of earshot.

"If you'd taught school, as I have," she replied, mentioning the occupation with a touch of pride, as I thought, "you'd have seen a good many."

"So you've been a schoolma'am," I rejoined. "Do you like it better than making cake?"

"Cake is mighty uncertain," said she, "but I guess more school pupils are spoiled in the baking. I suppose a person naturally likes to do what he can do best. I wish I could draw like Miss Jones."

"Perhaps you could," said I. "If Mr. Trask would teach you. He teaches her, doesn't he?"

"Yes," said Lucy Ann. "He teaches her all the time."

"Is she staying here?" I asked.

She seemed not to have heard the question, and I was about to repeat it when she made a gesture toward the house, and at the same time shook her head.

"You'll see her around quite often, though," she said. "Ain't she pretty?"

"Indeed she is," I assented.

"Mighty pretty, I call her," said Lucy Ann, and she compressed her lips firmly after the words were out. We walked a little way in silence.

"Goodby," she said suddenly. "I've got to go in."

She nodded to me and then ran lightly toward the kitchen door, in which

She gave me a quick glance of gratitude, at that moment appeared Mrs. Witherspoon, looking, as I thought, not quite as pleasant as usual.

I glanced back toward the spot where we had left the others. All were upon their feet, Trask facing in my direction, with Miss Jones at his right hand and Jimmy at his left. By the way that Trask's head turned from side to side I knew that an animated conversation was in progress, and I could not be in doubt as to the subject. Jimmy had told his news about the photograph. Did they guess that I had supposed it to be Sibyl's? Probably. So Trask was in the secret. He knew where Sibyl was.

Well, for that matter, so did I. Beyond question she was the girl in the orchard.

OVER THE STATE

Various Matters of Interest to Indiana Readers Presented Here.

HARRISON MONUMENT

Memorial to Former President to be Erected on Federal Building Site at Indianapolis.

Committee Has Been Authorized to Select Design and Let the Contract.

Indianapolis, March 24.—At a meeting of the directors of the Benjamin Harrison Memorial association at the Commercial club it was decided that the space that had been offered by the United States government for the monument should be accepted. This is between the new federal building and the sidewalk in East Ohio street. A sub-committee consisting of J. B. Elam, Charles W. Smith, H. J. Milliken, J. W. Kern and Evans Woollen, was appointed to select a suitable design for the monument, let the contract and complete the other details of the work. The monument will cost about $40,000. A meeting of the sub-committee to discuss further plans will be called soon.

ARRAIGNED FOR MURDER

Louis Roth on Trial for Killing of Charles Koehler.

Boonville, Ind., March 24.—Louis Roth, who killed Charles Koehler, of this city, on the night of Jan. 16, and was released on $5,000 bond under writ of habeas corpus, is on trial in the circuit court. Roth is a country boy, twenty-two years old, and bearing an excellent reputation. He attended a theatrical performance in this city on the night in question, and was "guyed" by Koehler who followed him to the sidewalk and assaulted him. Roth defended himself with his umbrella, jabbing Koehler in the eye, the point penetrating the brain and causing death. Roth went to his home, but, ascertaining that Koehler was dead, he voluntarily surrendered to the authorities, pleading self-defense. The victim was a miner, and the miners are pressing the prosecution.

Duggins Sentenced to Hang.

Terre Haute, Ind., March 24.—For the murder of Mrs. Sarah Ramsey and two of her children, Jerry Duggins will suffer death. Shortly after 10 o'clock last night the jury reported its verdict to Judge Piety in the circuit court, finding the murderer guilty in the first degree and fixing his punishment at death. Judge Piety immediately rendered judgment, sentencing Duggins to be hanged before sunrise on the morning of July 8 at the state prison in Michigan City.

Had to Let It Burn.

Bloomington, Ind., March 24.—A lamp exploded in the baggage car on the Louisville express train No. 3 at a point between Harrodsburg and Guthrie, and as there was no way of extinguishing the blaze, the car was separated from the train and was totally consumed with contents, including baggage and express matter.

"Rough House" in a Church.

Evansville, Ind., March 24.—As a result of factional differences in the Nevada street Baptist church, the Rev. Wesley Smith, pastor, has been fined for provoke, in calling one of his women parishioners a liar, while George Reinert, deacon, was similarly penalized on an assault and battery charge for striking the preacher.

One Only Reached Shore.

Jeffersonville, Ind., March 24.—Andy Isregg, nineteen; Arthur Everhart, eighteen, and Edward Hirt, twenty-one years old, were drowned in the Ohio river here, near the Big eddy. They, with Elmer Snider, were fishing in a small skiff, and it was overturned by the current. Snider was the only one to reach shore.

Lightning Kills Livestock.

Boonville, Ind., March 24.—During a storm in this vicinity lightning struck a barn belonging to Aaron Ayer, near this city, and twelve cows and two horses were cremated, and a large amount of hay, feed and other farm property was consumed. Loss $2,000; partially insured.

Cloudburst Does Damage.

Madison, Ind., March 24.—Armstrong's store and postoffice at Manville were swept away by the flood, with contents. The loss is $3,000. Houses, barns, bridges and live stock were lost in the cloudburst. The aggregate loss is many thousand dollars.

Assault Ended in Death.

Marion, Ind., March 24.—David Scott, a veteran, of the Soldiers' Home, beaten in a "dive" known as the "Dark Secret," and because of which assault several arrests have been made, is dead of his injuries.

Evansville Rioter Fined.

Evansville, Ind., March 24.—Grant Akin, another of the men under indictment for rioting here in July last, during an attack on the jail, has been fined $50 and costs. A number of other men are yet to be tried.

Proper Treatment of Pneumonia.

Pneumonia is too dangerous a disease for anyone to attempt to doctor himself, although he may have the proper remedies at hand. A physician should always be called. It should be borne in mind, however, that pneumonia always results from a cold or from an attack of the grip, and by the proper treatment of these diseases a threatened attack of pneumonia may be warded off. There is no question whatever about this, as during the thirty years and more that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has been used, we have yet to learn of a single case of a cold or attack of the grip having resulted in pneumonia when this remedy was used. It is also used by physicians in the treatment of pneumonia with the best results. Dr. W. J. Smith, of Sanders, Ala., who is also a druggist, says of it: "I have been selling Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and prescribing it in my practice for the past six years. I use it in cases of pneumonia and have always gotten the best results." Sold by A. G. Luken & Co., and W. H. Sudhoff, fifth and Main.

Through the heart of Alaska flows the mighty Yukon river, the largest in North America, larger and longer than the Mississippi. On this great river one may ride for more than two thousand miles with as much comfort as upon the Hudson.
