Many animals have an idea of concrete numbers up to a few units and some go even farther. A dog which is accustomed to receive only three pieces of sugar will not ask for more after he has had his quota. In certain mines where horses are required to make thirty trips a day they walk at once to the stable after making the thirtieth trip. Montaigne tells of oxen, employed in the royal gardens of Suza, that refused to perform more than their daily task of turning the great irrigation wheels through one hundred revolutions.

(New York Sun.)

Robert Mantell, after an absence of seven years from New York, opened at the Fourteenth Street theater last night in a romantic play called "The Light of Other Days."

The title was suggestive and there was much in Mr. Mantell's acting that recalled his last appearance in this theater, when he supported Fanny Davenport in "Fedora."

Some of the newer stars of the made-while-you-wait order might profitably study the methods of Mr. Mantell.

The authors of "The Light of Other Days," W. A. Tremaine and Irving L. Hall, have written a good thriller, beginning with battle and sudden death and winding up with a romance. It is full of action. The prologue is laid at the Chateau de la Croix in France, in 1792, a time when the life insurance business wasn't good in that particular country.

Mantell as Maurice Desmond, a young Irishman who has gone to the chateau to protect his cousin, Helene de la Croix, whom he loves, escapes miraculously from the castle when it falls before the army of liberty. Helene dies, leaving her daughter in Ireland to Desmond's care.

The first act takes place in 1810, when the daughter has become a young woman and Desmond, and the play thereafter bustles through four acts to a satisfactory climax.

Mantell is still the sterling actor that he was in the days when he supported Fanny Davenport. His voice rings the change from drama to humor with all the old time ease. He was assisted by Marie Booth Russell.

The audience laughed with Mantell, wept with him and cheered him until he must have been glad to have been back in New York again. There are many stars whom we can spare more gladly than Mantell.

At the Gennett theater tomorrow, matinee and night.

Manager O. G. Murray announces Monday, March 28, as the second appearance here this season of J. H. Barnes' "Dainty Paree Burlesquers," who, it will be remembered, made such a fine impression during their visit here last season.

Manager Barnes has not been satisfied, however, with that success and has, therefore, added materially to the strength and attractiveness of his organization for this tour. The company is composed of a score or more of young and exceedingly pretty and vivacious girls whose costumes in both the opening and closing burlesques, are said to be works of art, and a coterie of comedians who have the happy faculty of creating laughter provoking ideas so rapidly as to keep the audience in an almost constant whirl of good humor from start to finish. Both skits are elaborately staged with brilliant light and scenic effects. The opening one which introduces the entire company is called "A Night at the Hotel Waldrough," and cleverly satirizes fads and foibles in the metropolis. There is an abundance of catchy music of the latest vintage and amusing complications galore. In both this and the closing burlesque "The Wrong Mr. Corbett," Miss May Booth leads the female contingent in the general festival of song and dance while the comedians have full play for their talents. The vaudeville olio is one of the best to be seen here this season and introduces a number of well known artists.

The Death Penalty. A little thing sometimes results in death. Thus a mere scratch, insignificant cut or puny boils have paid the death penalty. It is wise to have Bucklen's Arnica Salve ever handy. It's the best Salve on earth and will prevent fatality, when Burns, Sores, Ulcers and Piles threaten. Only 25c, at A. G. Luken & Co.'s drug store.
