CREMATED.

John Tyler's Remains Consigned to the Crematory Oven.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer. A little funeral procession yesterday afternoon wended its way westwardly along Browne street, and the people along the solemn line of march stood in their dooryards and wondered where the cortege could be going, as there are no cemeteries in that direction. The procession was proceeding to the crematory, which stands on the brow of the hill to the east of Dixmyth avenue, strongly reminding the beholder of the ruins of some old feudal castle. The cortege wended its way to the crematory instead of the cemeway to the crematory instead of the cemetery, in accordance with the ante mortem request of the deceased. The deceased was John Tyler, of Milldale, Ky., who had gone five years beyond man's allotted three score. ten. He claimed to be a nephew of esident Tyler. He was a man of some property and means, and was noted in the community in which he resided for certain eccentricities. During the last few years of his life he was an enthusiast on

THE SUBJECT OF CREMATION, and never failed to visit the sick of his and never lathed to visit the sick of his neighborhood to advise them that if the worst should come the wisest disposition that they could have made of their remains would be to have them cremated. He was a stockholder in the crematory in which his own remains were yesterday incinerated. Before his death the deceased, in keeping with the eccentricities for which he was noted, gave directions that his body should the placed on ice and that his coffin noted, gave directions that his body should not be placed on ice, and that his coffin should be the plainest and most inexpensive to be found. This last request, at least, was certainly carried out most conscientiously. certainly carried out most conscientionsiv. It was about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon when the hearse and two carriages containing mourners drew up at the crematory door. The news that there was to be a cremation had gone abroad and fully TWO HUNDRED PEOPLE stood about in a roasting sun awaiting the arrival of the remains. The mourners carried with them a glass urn in which to receive the ashes after the incineration. The great furnace was in readiness to receive the body, the stoker standing at its hot and glowing mouth feeding it coke. The very plain coffin was taken from the hearse and carried into one of the little ante-rooms of the crematory. There the body was taken from the coffin by two attendants, denuded of its shroud and wrapped in an alumsoaked winding-sheet.

THE BODY was placed on an iron car-cradle, the at tendants called it. The car, or truck, is a four-wheeled affair, about the length of the human body, the flat iron bars of which it is constructed crossing each other at right angles, leaving regular series of open squares. Through these open spaces the ashes drop into the bed of fire bespaces the ashes drop into the bed of fire be-low, according as the body incinerates. It is only the small proportion of the ashes clinging to the bars that are preserved for the friends. The body, wrapped up com-pletely, head and all, in the alum-soaked winding-sheet, was laid upon the car, and the car with a vigorous push was rolled into the fiery furnace. The body remains on the car during the incineration. Very little car during the incineration. Very little privacy attended the cremation. All who applied were admitted, except perhaps the mischievous and irreverent small boy, who is wanted nowhere, especially where the presence of death imposes the duty of de-

FIRST EXPERIENCE at a cremation, and, as human nature is pretty much the same, his own feelings will no doubt fairly illustrate the emotions of all The scene awakened none of that awe, that sadness, that serious reflection, that determination to, in the future, think less of the here and more of the hereafter, that is inspired by the sight of a coffin being lowered into the dark, damp grave, and the sound of the earth falling upon the lid as the grave-diggers cover it up from mortal eyes forever. The scene awakened no nobler protection that the sound of the series of the scene awakened no nobler than the scene awakened no nobler t emotion than one of curiosity. It inspired no horror, no sadness, no thought of death, none of these peculiar feelings that the sight of a burial stirs up in the breast. It was simply corum. It was the writer's

A FEELING OF CURIOSITY that was experienced, an interest such as you feel in a ceremony or operation that you never saw before. Simply that and nothing more. The crowd that stood about discussed the operation in a matter-of-fact way, and the operation in a matter-of-fact way, and with a cold-blooded curiosity, as if it were a spectacular exhibition prepared for their entertainment, and not the solemn ceremony of "ashes to ashes." In a few moments after the body had been placed in the oven a blue flame began to play about the winding sheet in which the remains were wrapped. "What's the idea of wrapping the body in an alum-soaked sheet?" was asked of the attendant.

"Alum resists fire," was the reply, "and while the sheet is comparatively uninjured by the heat, the body within its folds is rap-idly incinerating. The idea is to conceal the body during the process of cremation, in order to shut out from the sight of the friends THE UNPLEASANT SPECTACLE of seeing the departed one's flesh baking to a crisp and the bones burning to ashes."

The heat of the furnace was almost incon ceivably intense. It was at such a degree of white heat that a glance within revealed the embers fairly glistening like snow be neath the cold rays of a January sun. The temperature was up to 2,500°. Still, so thick are the brick walls of the oven that ne could stand within six inches of it with comfort, except when the stoker opened the heavy iron door to shovel in more coke. Twice, at the request of the mourners, the attendant opened the door and allowed them to look at the body.

THE WIDOW, a very pleasing looking woman, of about 35—she was the second wife of the deceased—looked in with the others. She seemed well pleased with the process of incineration, for after the second look she remarked that she believed cremation to be better than burial, and that when her time comes she guessed she'd have her remains disposed of as her her burials.

as her husband's were. The mourners de-parted after the body had been in the oven about half an hour, leaving orders that when the cremation was completed THE ASHES should be placed in the glass urn they had ought and sent to a certain drug store on ne street, where they would be called for. "It won't be a long job," remarked an at-

We're going to establish here what is known as the 'hot test.' One room will be heated by steam to a certain temperature. All bodies will be laid in this room for a time before being placed in the oven. If the body is dead, under the influence of the heat, the skin will soon grow dark. If there's

At the end of an hour the attendant pronounced the cremation completed.

The reporter looked into the oven.

The alumned sheet, which had so long resisted combustion, had finally yielded. Only a fragment of it, puffed up like a balloon, remained. There on the iron car, in perfect outlines of the human skeleton, lay the ashes, very light colored, and very fine—all the mortal remains of eccentric old John Tyler. Then began the cooling process, which is simply allowing the oven to cool off so that the car could be withdrawn. The ashes were then gathered into the glass urn left by the relatives and sent to the place at left by the relatives and sent to the place at which the widow directed that they should be left until called for.

WILL THE BANK WIND UP?

A Movement by the Stockholders of the Planters' Savings Bank.

At Augusta Tuesday a paper was being circulated for signatures the object of which was to wind up the business of the Planters' Loan and Savings Bank. The rumor was corroborated, the stockholder stating that while the bank is perfectly solvent, it is not paying, and that the institution can be wound up and the stockhold-ers get much more out of it than if they continue to run it. The stock is quoted to-day at five, and it is believed that if closed out it will easily net six and a half. The following copy of an advertisement explains itself:

STOCKHOLDERS MEETING OF THE PLANTERS' LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK.

"The undersigned representing one-fourth of the capital stock of said bank, hereby give notice that a convention of the stock-holders of this corporation will be held at holders of this corporation will be held at its banking house in the city of Augusta at 10 o'clock a. m., on Wednesday, July 27, 1887. Business of great importance will be brought before the convention. Leonard Phinzy, John Jay Cohen, J. B. White, E. F. Verdery, Harper Bros., James E. Harper, C. H. Howard, W. H. Howard."

The Augusta Gazette of yesterday has the following on the suject: "The publication concerning the Planters' Loan and Savings Bank necessarily disquieted many of ings Bank necessarily disquieted many of the stockholders and caused a great deal of alarm in town. The facts are these. The gentlemen signing the notice calling a convention of stockholders did so on their own responsibility and without notifying the President or the cashier. True, these gentlemen represent one-fourth of the capital stock, but that did not authorize them to call the convention. Gentlemen representing one-fourth of the capital stock desiring to call a meeting should notify the President, who will comply with their request. In this case this was not done. Not only so, but some of the genthemen who signed the call stated that they were under the impression that the card was asking the President to call the convention, and were not at all aware that it was for publication. The Gazette is in a position to state that the bank is not only soluent but the title of the grant ware reconstructed. tion to state that the bank is not only solvent, but that if its affairs were wound up and all the real estate sold, a handsome balance would be left after paying its entire debts. No dividend was paid this half year—the first, half year in the listory of the bank, now seventeen years, that it failed to pay a dividend—but, as was remarked by good authoristic to the Carte business was very dull deud—but, as was remarked by good authority to the Gazette, business was very dull during the last half year. The same authority stated also that the expenses of first half year are much greater than the expenses of the last half. The publication had a bad effect yesterday. For the protection of all parties interested the rule and by-law requiring sixty days' time will be enforced.

Much of the stock of the bank is invested in real estate, and a big sum is out on loan, so that it would be impossible for the bank to liquidate its debts all at once, as it would be for any other bank. The President is confident that with a little time all will be right again and the little incident created will soon blow over. One thing the stockholders and depositors may rest assured of, that the bank's position is impregnable and that dollar for dollar can be paid. The present lull in the business of the bank is the first in seventeen years, and until this past half year the bank was able to pay a substantial dividend."

The First Caterpillar.

From the Albany (Ga.) News and Advertiser. As surely, regularly and unfailingly as Primus Jones is the first bale man, so is G. M. Bacon the first caterpillar man. Primus first bale came in on July 5 this year, and now we have Mr. Bacon's first caterpillar. It is now on exhibition in a little quinine bottle in the News and Advertiser office, with three days' rations of cotton leaves around it. The appearance of the first caterpillar about the middle of July should not be viewed with alarm, especially when it is remembered that it came from Merry Bacon's farm, and that he is the early bird that inversely catches the worm. Our adthat invariably catches the worm. Our advices from him are that there are no indications, as yet, of the appearance of the cater-pillars in anything like pestilential form or numbers. He probably had to rise early and search diligently to find this one, but, being jealous of his reputation as the first caterpillar man, and stimulated by the appearance of Primus' first bale, he was de termined to have it.

Heroes and Heroines.

There are few who endure bodily troubles without complaint. Did you ever meet among the heroes or heroines of your acquaintance—if any such there have been—one with a yellowish cast of countenance and that jaundiced aspect generally, which the most unpracticed eye recognizes as the product of a disordered liver, who did not complain, and peevishly, too, of the soreness of the recalcitrant organ, of pains beneath the right shoulder blade, of dyspeptic symptoms, constipation and headache? Of course, you never did, and of course the individual was not using Hostetter's Stomach Bit ters, or he would not so have looked—so have complained. To purify the blood when contaminated with bile, and conduct the secretion into its proper channel, to re-establish regularity of the bowels, banish billous headache and remove impediments to complete digestion, nothing can approach in efficacy this peerless alterative and tonic. Malarial complaints, always involving the liver and kidney and bladder inactivity, are remedied by it. It is a capital appetizer. the heroes or heroines of your acquaintance-if
