Bryan Missed a Treat.

All this Bryan missed. It would have been a revelation to him had it been postponed until his arrival. When he arrived at the park all he could see was a sea of bright, intelligent looking faces which belonged to people who are happy, contented and prosperous. They filled the space before the speakers' stand and overflowed into the territory set apart for plentekers and promenaders. They perched in tall treetops and sat on branches like crows on a cornfield fence. The old, the middle aged, the young and the infant, were in evidence. All seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion with zest. John Sullivan addressed them on the beauties and benefits of the Woodmen's craft, of which he is a high examplar, in a manner that pleased them; the Misses McConnell and Graham, Kansas City favorites, sang coon songs, danced and cakewalked into their good graces and were encored until their repertoire was exhausted.

Bryan Is Getting Bald.

At last Bryan appeared. He was given an ovation. He looked tired. Time has not dealt gently with the greatest silver crusader of the age. He is getting bald rapidly. His brow is furrowed with deep lines. His dark eyes have lost their penetrating fire, and they are rimmed with dark lines that throw into relief lines of red that indicate that the strain of constantly peering into the future is of the irritation order. His '96 mobile features have changed until he has the appearance of a man who has been through crucial fires and has pronited by his experience. A cheap suit of clothing inclosed his stalwart frame, and from his vest dangled a neat thread of gold, which at one end was attached to a gold watch and at the other end supported a plain crystal locket. But his smile is unchanged. It again came into play when he ascended the stand and it remained with him throughout the afternoon. He shook hands with the distinguished gentlemen on the platform, and at once established himself with the newspaper men present by the cordiality of his greeting.

"Noblest Roman of Them All."

Colonel James Graham, as chairman, told the people of the treat that was in store for them, and then introduced Mr. Bryan as "one who wore no crown, but who received the homage of the American people because he was "the noblest Roman of them all."

The apecch that followed was of course Bryanesque. It was devoted to the denunciation of imperialism, militarism, the money power and its alleged allied trusts and to the laudation of the income tax and silver. It was interesting throughout, and in his inimitable way, he, by the use of appropriate anecdotes, made many telling hits. His oratory is still of a high order. His store of magnetism shows no signs of diminution and his resourcefulness in meeting an unexpected question or remark is just as great as when silver was a new and possibly more interesting study than it is now. In his preface he deciared that he was at times almost persuaded that he should preach. The text was in the that he was at times almost persuaded that he should preach. The text was in the that he should preach. The text was in the Bible, but just where it could be found or how it was worded he said he did not know. "If I should decide to preach," said he, "the text would read something like this: The man who says he loves God and hates his brother is a liar!" The Declaration of Independence was alluded to, and a point "against the enemy" was made in the declaration that it was very popular two years ago and he hoped it would be more popular a year hence than it is

be the livellest dead issue the country has ever known and he humorously alluded to the many attempts "the goldbugs had made to bury it." "But no tomb," he said, with fervor, "was ever made so strong that it could imprison a righteous cause."

Cuba and "hard times" were his succeeding topics. The former was handled in true Bryan anti-administration style, and the "hard times" section he adorned with a personal anecdotal application. He referred first to the pessimistic cries that went up just previous to the election of 1896 and of the business failures that followed the election. "I was blamed before the election for what it was predicted would happen," said he, "and after the election I was blamed for what really did happen. It reminded me of my father-in-law. He is a good father-in-law. He is just as good as any son-in-law should have. Just after I married his only daughter he said to me: "William, while I have, both of us shall not want." It took me thirteen years to get even. A bank in which he kept his money falled. I went to him to administer comfort and sympathy. "Father-in-law," said I, 'while I have, we wouldn't both of us want."

Prosperity Due to the Klondike.

The Klondike gold output, the orator declared, was in a great measure responsible for the plethora of gold in the country. "Before the election the cry was raised." said he, "that there was gold in plenty, but the Klondike has turned loose its gold and made the plentifulness that now exists. We don't want to go to Europe for money to run this country with," he said later. "Let us dig our money out of our mountains in-stead of depending on the money lenders and a market for our crops because of

and a market for our crops because of famine elsewhere."

Trusts he handled without diplomatic gloves. There is no such thing as a good trust," he said. "The nation must destroy the trusts or the trusts will destroy it as a republic. There never will be a good trust until angels are sent down from heaven to manage it."

The Philippines and the war now on there were discussed calmly, but the administration was not overlooked in the efforts now being made to subjugate the insurgents as of a gunpowder gospel order and planned on imperialistic lines. He said that the Chicago platform had been criticised by ministers who did not under-

Handshaking Bee Followed. At this point Mr. Bryan had been speak ing for nearly two hours, and with a magnificently worded peroration he brought his address to a close.

The people cheered him as he bowed his good-by, and then a handshaking bee followed. His good right hand did not fall him, nor did his smile forsake his expressive face. Linked His Name With Lincoln's.

In another telling outburst he linked his name with that of Lincoln. "Lincoln," said he, "warnied his country against the return of monarchy. If I should issue the same warning they would say I was a demagogue. Yet Lincoln did it."

The war was also discussed. "The war," said he, "has shown the people that the government is limited when it deals with property, but unlimited when it deal more intense. The Republicans also con-template retiring the greenbacks in the interest of national bank notes. Now, can the money question be forgotten while the money changers are (to quote the language used by Mr. McKinley in 1891) trying to make money scarcer, and, therefore, dear-er-money is the master and all things else the servant.

"The gold men know that our abandonment of the ratio of 16 to 1 would be equivalent to an abandonment of the money question, and they know that an abandon ment of the money question would lead to the surrender of all that the party gained by the Chicago convention. The Republicans fear the money question, and, therefore, the Republican papers are ready to praise the wisdom and magnify the prominence of any Democrat who will give out an interview against 15 to 1.

"The trust question is a great question.

Is a Cautious Man.

Mr. Bryan is a very cautious man. He is proud of his bump of caution and said that it had often been the means of keeping out of trouble. "No one knows," said he, "how words can be misconstrued any better than I do, and for that reason I am careful." He would not discuss Mr. Croker's recent expressions of praise for him nor John R. McLean's renewed fealty to him and the cause of sliver. "It would not become me," said he, "to discuss what people ray about me, no matter how much their expression pleased me." Kansas City as a convention city was also a tabooed subject, although his manner indicated that he has a great admiration for the city. it had often been the means of keeping out

During the trip I shall make several speeches but where I do not now know."

Speaking of the coming campaign Mr. Bryan modestly said: "The outlook for success grows brighter every day. I receive letters daily that surprise me. They contain words of encouragement and from unexpected sources."

Mr. Bryan has supplied his campaign manager, who is his brother, and lives in Lincoln, with new photographs of himself. "I had them made because of the demand of newspapers for them. He was very muca amused during his speech by the antics of an inebriated corn husker, who stood directly beneath him. In order to get in touch with his vast audience Mr. Bryan mounted a chair. "That's right!" cried his friend. Whenever he made a point the answering cry would be: "And that's no lie!" or "That's hot stuff!" Although interrupted continually the speaker was not in the least bit disconcerted. Later he said: "I actually enjoyed it. At no time was I annoyed and it often amused me."

As he took his farewell view of the villiage, with its streets crowded with happy people, with skyrockets and toy balloons ascending heavenward and brass bands playing, Mr. Bryan said: "I am glad I came. Where is the man who would now have the temerity to ask, after this display: "What is the matter with Kansas?" When at his ease Mr. Bryan is an ex

JOUAUST UPHOLDS GENERALS IN REFUSING TO REPLY.

Military Contingent Make a Great Clamor in Trying to Defend Each Other Against M. Labori's Searching Questions and Insinuations.

RENNES, Aug. 24.-To-day's session of the Dreyfus court-martial was marked by one of the most exciting scenes of the trial. The proceedings opened with a skirmish entirely favorable to the defense over Colonel Maurel, president of the courtmartial of 1894, who admitted reading one of the secret documents to the court which had not been seen by the defense. He protested that only one document was looked at, alleging that this sufficed to enable him to form a conviction that could not be shaken. This protest made matters worse because, as M. Labori pointed out, if he perused one it was his bounden duty to peruse all. Colonel Jouanst upheld Colonel Maurel in his refusal to indicate the nature of the document he read, but M. Labori announced that he would summon Captain Freystatter, another member of the tribunal of 1894, and get his version of what then passed behind the backs of the counsel for the defense. Colonel Maurel felt his position keenly and continually hesitated before replying to Labori's questions.

All this, however, was only preliminary to a fierce battle that ensued between M. Labori and General Mercier, the latter recelving reinforcements from General Roget. General Gonse and General de Boisdeffre. as well as invaluable assistance from Colonel Jouaust himself.

M. Labori took General Mercler over the whole ground of his previous deposition. This led to several sharp passages at arms between the advocate and Colonel Jouaust. who upheld Mercier in refusing to reply to several questions which in the general opinion of those in the courtroom, were disinctly pertinent.

Whenever General Mercler was cornered he declined to answer, and Colonel Jouaust invariably supported him. M. Labori protested most energetically. His words and manner breathed the deepest indignation, but the president of the court-martial was inflexible.

The intervention of Generals Gonse, Roget and De Boisdeffre and Major Lauth, who in rapid succession mounted the stage or rose in their seats and interposed remarks, was very exciting, and carried the spectators along on a wave of breathless interest. One after the other these officers, who were to-day in full uniform, would jump up and cry, "I demand to be heard!" and, without further waiting, Then M. Penot, a friend of the late Colonel Sandherr, chief of the intelligence department, be read by the clerk. It was to the effect that Colonel Sandherr said the Dreyfus family offered to him 150,000 francs on condition that he would clear Dreyfus.

M. Demange, for the defense, disposed of this allegation by reading the actual note on the subject written by Sandherr, there by proving that the colonel's remarks had been distorted. Dreyfus' brothers having only said: "We are convinced of the in-

The president of the court then called the next witness, Colonel Maurel, who was president of the Dreyfus court-martal in isst. Complete silence fell upon the court as the infantry sergeant who was acting asher conducted Maurel to the witness bar. The colonel was attired in a black freck coat and wore the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor at his buttonhole. His har is gray, and he has a ragged, iron gray mustache. His face showed anxiety. As M. Lubori lashed him with pointed questions the colonel hesitated and then answered in a short, choppy manner, and when M. La-Labori lashed him with po.n.ed questions the colonel hesitated and then answered in a short, choppy manner, and when M. Labori finally disposed of him the witness left the platform with the pale face and scared look of a man who has awakened from a nightmare. Counsel had drawn from the colonel a confession that the secret dossier was communicated to the judges of the court-martial of 184 by Colonel Du Paty de Clam. This avowal produced a sensation in court, and Maurel's declaration that he only read one of the documents did not affect the main fact, while his statement that the reading of the document had no effect upon him, as his mind was already made up, was nullified by his subsequent declaration that this one document sufficed to convince him.

M. Labori then put a series of scarching questions to General Mercler with reference to the communication of the secret dossier for the court-martial and his attitude in 1894, and an interesting scene ensued. The general refused to reply to all the questions, and there were sharp passages at arms between counsel and Colonel Jouaust, who upheld General Mercler while the dialogue between the general and M. Labori became acrimonious. Counsel became very heated and showed it in his ages at arms between coursel and Colonel Jouaust, who upheld General Mercler, while the dialogue between the general and M. Labori became acrimonious. Counsel became very heated and showed it in his voice and gestures. The general, however troubled his mind might be, seldom departed from the callous demeanor characteristic of him.

The lawyer made a strong point on the part Esterhazy played.

Mercler said he did not know Esterhazy, and only saw him once at the Zola trial. "That is very interesting," exclaimed M. Labori. "But surely General Mercler was present at the Esterhazy trial?"

The general replied that he was not there and that he knew nothing about the evidence in the Esterhazy presecution.

"What?" cried M. Labori. "General Mercler, who was the chief accuser of Dreyfus, did not even follow the proceedings in the Esterhazy trial?"

A loud murmur of surprise and indignant comment came from the audience but Colonel Jouaust immediately suppressed it.

Counsel then brought General Mercler to his assertion that 35,09,090 francs were sent by the defenders of Dreyfus, and asked the general to say how he knew this, who sent it and other awkward questions which the general was unable to answer.

A question as to how the bordereau arrived at the offices of the general staff, its date, etc., was then introduced, which led to a strange scene for a court of law. General Roset, on mounting the platform to give explanations, was followed by General De Boisdeffre, M. Gribelin, Major Lauth and other military witnesses, all holding up their hands to signify that they desired to speak, while at the same time M. Labori was firing questions. The result was a perfect babel until the president of the court could stand it no longer and when the government commissary, Major Carriere, also interpolated a few remarks. Colonel Jouaust turned to him and asked him to be quiet, remarking that the judges could not hear half a dozen people at the same time.

Then M. Labori proceeded to take up the Panizzardi dispatch and to bring out the contradictory translations of it and the falseness of the final version.

After hearing General Mercier and General Chamoln on the subject, Colonel Jouaust declared the court would rule the dispatch out of evidence.

cide he is guilty, you must pronounce his condemnation."

The deputy accompanied this instruction to the court with sweeping gestures and turn to leave the stage amid roars of laughter from the audience, which De Grandmaison met with a flerce, stage villain look that again convulsed the court.

M. Labori, however, called the deouty back. He wanted to examine several of M. De Grandmaison's statements, but Colonel Jouaust refused to allow the questions to be put, at which counsel became tremendously indignant and insisted upon his right to do so, and a warm altercation ensued between the president of the court and counsel. The former, however, maintained his decision, which was indisputably unfair to Dreyfus, and M. Labori sat down, gagged and boiling over with indignation.

PRESIDENT LOUBET HOPEFUL Says He Is Convinced That the Troubles of France Are Nearing the End.

RAMBOUILLETTE, FRANCE, Aug. 24.-Replying to an address of sympathy from the president and members of the district court, President Loubet to-day expressed his gratitude at being able to appear at Rambouillette in spite of the cares of office to which the speaker had referred. These cares, he added, were real ones, and it was not without deep grief that he beheld a this week and Tuesday of next week will disturbance of public mind leading to street be gala days in Omaha. BURIED TREASURE IN DEMAND Three Claimants for the $3,950 Dug Up Recently by St. Louis Negroes. ST. LOUIS, Aug. 24 .- The $3,950 found at Meramec heights last Friday by James 14k Martin, Centennial Rowley and George Renfrow, and which was supposed to have been a part of the money stolen from Charles D. Collins more than two years ago, has become the subject of litigation. A garnishment was obtained on the money in the St. Louis county circuit court to day by a law firm of St. Louis.

The petition was presented by the Union Savings band, of Memphis, Tenn., the officers of which aliege that Collins is indebted to their institution for more than that amount of money loaned him. that amount of money loaned him.

The garnishment papers were served on Chief Clerk C. G. Ricker, of the local subtreasury. Mr. Ricker had sent the mutilated bills to Washington for redemption, but they will soon be returned to this city. The claim of the Memphis bank is sharply disputed by the Kirkwood negroes who found the money, and they have announced their intention of engaging competent legal talent to defend their claim. In addition to these claimants, it is and In addition to these claimants, it is said that Charles D. Collins himself has come forward to recover the money. Collins is now in Chicago.

disturbance of public mind leading to street disorders. These should not be exaggerated, however, and the public should not lose heart. Continuing, President Loubet said: be gala days in Omaha. On the former day, the Tenth Pennsylvania regiment will be the guest of the city, and on Tuesday the "Fighting First" of Nebraska will reach home. Mayor Moores to-day issued a proclamation calling on all people to descend to the fact that it is firmly resolved to defend the republic, preserve public peace and assure respect for the law. The whole country should bow to the verdict of the Rennes court-martial, which can be relied upon for absolute impartiality, and the representatives of the people will co-operate in the work of reconciliation and pacification which is necessary for the highest interests of France."

Watch Repairing

It is claimed by old watchmakers that watches never wear out, but through neglect of cleaning at inter-vals and incompetent workmen the vals and incompetent workmen the lives of watch es may be graatly shortened. The exquisite works in a fine watch require a skillful workman to clean or repair it. We have such workmen in our employ, and no matter how fine or complicated your watch may be, it is safe in their hands.
