THE SUWANEE RIVER.

Familiar Negro Melody Refers to the Upper Portion of the Stream.

Mr. Stovall, of the Savannah Press, pays a two-column tribute to the Suwanee River, in the course of which he says:

"One of the best known streams in the South is the Suwanee river, made so by the song; but in reality few people have ever seen it and very few have explored it  'Way Down Upon the Suwanee River' was written way up on the Suwanee, if legend is true. There the river is narrow and commonplace, with nothing to commend it but its name. It is a negro lullaby—a noble precursor of modern rag-time—which Neilson and Patti and Melba and Nordica have warbled and which has furnished a break and an encore in classical concerts for generations.

"But the lower river, the real Suwanee, with its chromes and currents, its palms and cypress, its fringe of and its unfailling setting of green—is and its unfailling setting of gree—is deserving of something more than a coon song. It is worth an epic of depth and dignity. Nature did not set things to rag-time when she dug this river. It is too graceful and noble."

That is all pretty and more, but the truth of history is that the Suwanee river which inspired the famous song is located way up in Kentucky, and not in Florida, replies the Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

All the other things said about the Florida Suwanee, which has its source in Georgia—the Okefinokee Swamp—are true. In addition, however, to the main source in the great Georgia swamp, the Suwanee has tributaries from this state in the Withlacooche river, the Alapaha river, and the Swanoochee creek. The Suwanee is very much of a Georgia enterprise, drawing from the watersheds in Charlton, Ware, Clinch, Echols, Lowndes, Brooks, Colquitt, Berrien, Worth, Irwin, Dooley and slightly from several other South Georgia counties. It and its tributaries are also fed by a large number of great springs which may draw from the middle and mountain regions of Georgia.

But to get the best there is out of the far-famed Suwanee one must strike it with pole and hook near its main source in the Okefinokee.

Was on the List.

A bright girl asked to be absent from school half a day, on the plea that company was coming.

"It's a friend of my father's and his three boys," said the girl anxiously; "and mother doesn't see how she can do without me, because those boys act dreadfully."

The teacher referred her to the printed list of reasons which justified her absence, and asked if her case came under any of them.

"O, yes, Miss Smith," said the girl, eagerly, "it comes under this head:" and she pointed to the words "domestic affliction."—Christian Register.
