Sales Tax Point Again Explained By Commissioner

3 Cents Only Need be Paid on Purchase Running up to $1.16

RALEIGH, Nov. 30.—Although the sales tax schedule on purchases of less than one dollar is generally known by almost every one now, it does not seem to be known that a person does not have to pay more than the 3 cents tax on purchases up to $1.16, it was pointed out today by Commissioner of Revenue A. J. Maxwell and Director Harry McMullan of the sales tax division. For the sales tax regulations specify that a customer does not have to pay an additional 1 cent tax on fractional parts of a dollar where the total amount is in excess of $1.05, until the major fraction is passed.

Thus while a purchaser must pay a tax of 3 cents on purchases between 71 cents and $1.05, it is not necessary to add another cent of sales tax until the amount of the purchase exceeds $1.16, it was pointed out. Some merchants are reported as adding an extra cent of sales tax as soon as the total passes $1.05, thus making the tax 4 cents on total purchases in excess of that amount. But this should not be the case, McMullan and Maxwell explain, since the customer has a minor fraction of 12 cents in his or her favor, with the result that a tax of 4 cents cannot be added until the total amount of the purchase amounts to $1.17. Thus the sales tax schedule on purchases in excess of $1 is as follows:

From 71 cents to $1.16, the sales tax is 3 cents.
From $1.17 to $1.49, the tax is 4 cents.
From $1.50 to $1.83 the tax is 5 cents.
From $1.84 to $2.16 the tax is 6 cents.
From $2.17 to $2.49 the tax is 7 cents.

1600 Blankets Are Bought By State

RALEIGH, Nov. 30.—Contract for some 1,600 blankets for the State Hospital for the Insane at Morganton was awarded by the division of purchase and contract here today following the opening of bids yesterday. Contracts on four carloads of nails, large quantities of disinfectant for the prison camps and state institutions, and other articles were also awarded.

Although blankets are used in all the state institutions, the various hospitals for the insane use more than any others because insane patients pick them to pieces with their fingers by the hundreds.

ten to go. The Cats had a little the better of the first period.

In the second Seneca got to the Cat 28-yard line, but two passes failed and the ball went over on the Hendersonville 33-yard line, where a drive was started that carried to the visitors' 15 as the half ended.

In the third period after Hendersonville kicked off and the teams exchanged punts, the Cats got inside Seneca's 30-yard line. The drive was stopped and Johnson punted over the goal line. Byers made a first down on a lateral pass, but on second down Gesser intercepted a pass on the visitors' 35-yard line. Miller and Johnson made a first down on Seneca's 22 in three tries and the period ended.

Johnson lost two yards and two passes were batted down. The ball went over after a five-yard penalty for two incomplete passes on the visitors' 29-yard line. Byers failed to gain and then Gesser intercepted a pass to run for a touchdown. Edney took a pass for the extra point, but it was ruled incomplete as another Hendersonville player also touched the ball.

The visitors received the kickoff and returned it to midfield. A fumble cost the visitors six yards, but Byers took a pass for nine yards and Edney intercepted with a pass receiver to give the visitors a first down. Mixing a passing and driving attack the visitors got to the 11-yard line, but the Cats held for three downs and batted down a pass to get the ball on their own ine-yard line.

Miller plunged off tackle for 21 yards, but the Cats were offside and went back to their four-yard line. Parker got two and Miller six, and Johnson got off a nice kick that went out of bounds on the Cats' own 45. The visitors worked two passes for five yards but two were grounded and the ball went over. After one play the game ended.

The line-ups:

H'ville	Por.	Seneca

GOVERNMENT USING REPEAL TO INCREASE U. S. FOREIGN TRADE

Monday on a code which will bring the wholesale liquor industry under the alcohol control board.

The government, for the first time yesterday, disclosed its using repeal as a weapon to increase America's foreign trade. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic adviser to the agriculture department, said reciprocal agreements are being negotiated with foreign powers calling for a reduction of tariff barriers against American exports in return for liberal liquor import quotas.

THE UNKNOWN BLOND

By Laura Lou BROOKMAN

appeared in the kitchen doorway. "Morning, Aunt Kate!"

HIS aunt looked up, then went on removing golden brown slices of French toast from a smoking skillet. "Morning," she said crisply. "Go on into the dining room, David. Breakfast'll be on the table in a second."

Bannister located the newspaper on the living room table and opened out the pages. There was plenty about the King murder, but there was nothing that Bannister did not know. It gave him a feeling of relief. He was glad to know nothing important had happened while he was asleep. Headlines told of the search for "another suspect" whose name was not given. Dragan's story was credited to a "close friend of the dead man," also anonymous. Apparently no one on the rival newspaper had heard of Matthew and Melvina Hollister's connection with the case. At least it was not mentioned.

There was nothing new in the columns about the murder but still Bannister read them eagerly. Half way through the story of the new suspect, he was interrupted.

"David!"

It was his aunt calling and Aunt Kate would brook no delay at meal time.

"Coming!" Bannister answered. An instant later he appeared in the dining room, the newspaper in his hand.

The odor of fried ham and coffee and the French toast won him from his preoccupation, however. "Aunt Kate," he began, "there's not another cook like you in the whole country!"

She stopped him with a glance. "Never mind the flattery," she said. "Maybe you've something to say, David Bannister, about what you were doing all day yesterday. Lighting out after breakfast and not showing up again until midnight! I thought it was rest you came to Tremont for!"

While she had been talking she was pouring the coffee. Now she handed him a cup.

BANNISTER grinned. He didn't mind being addressed as though he were a 14-year-old. "It was like old times. 'Important business,' he told her. 'I've got a job.'"

"A what?"

"I've got a job. A respectable one. Newspaper reporter. I'm working on The Post."

Kate Hewlett waited. "Well?" she asked when he did not continue.

"That's all there is to it. Jim Paxton offered me a job on The Post and I took it. I'm working on this murder case."

The elevation of Mrs. Hewlett's eyebrows was expressive. "So that's it," she said. "You couldn't keep out of it! Something disgraceful and—and criminal happens, like a murder, and you couldn't keep out of it. I don't approve of this, David. I don't approve of it at all!"

But she didn't mean that. There was no disapproval in her voice and none in her eager eyes as she asked a moment later, "David—who do they think did it?"

"Oh, I don't know. It's hard to say now."

Mrs. Hewlett frowned. "I don't mean this man they've got locked in jail," she persisted, "or the other one they're looking for." (Bannister noted she had missed none of the details of the morning newspaper account.) "Isn't there
