Stories About Blind Men.

Three men, two of them blind, were drinking together one night, in the room of a public house, and as is too often the result of such convivial meetings, one of the blind men quarreled and came to blows with the man that could see. Here was likely to be a battle not by any means on equal terms. But the other blind man was equal to the occasion. That the man who could see should have no undue advantage over his less fortunate opponent, up jumped the blind friend and turned off the gas, and so they pommelled each other in a harmless way for a time. We have given an illustration of the warlike passion. As an offset we could give many illustrations of the gentler passion, love, for the blind are eminent disciples of Cupid and Hymen. As a rule a respectable blind man has no difficulty in getting a seeing wife, and very often with good looks to boot. And when we consider the delicacy of touch in the finger-tips of the blind, the latter is not to be wondered at. Blind men, however, do not always marry wives who see. We know of many instances in which both husband and wife are blind, and have managed to rear families without the occurrence of any serious mishap either to themselves or the children. And the cases are rare in which the latter are defective in sight. Only lately the marriage took place of a blind couple somewhat advanced in years, she being his second wife, and he her third blind husband. The marriage was not wanting in the elements of romance, for in their young days they had courted, and parted, blind in a double sense. We will conclude with a courtship, but in this case will not vouch for its truth. A blind man on several occasions met a widow, who was not, however, like himself, blind, and latterly concluded that she would make him a good wife. He resolved that he would "pop the question" without loss of time. Accordingly, one evening found him in the widow's house for that purpose, when his suit was entirely successful. But so elated was he with his success that, on leaving her door, he forgot he was up a flight of stairs. The staircase window being very low, and happening to be open, he felt the air on his heated brow, and at once stepped out without thinking where he was, and so fell into the court below. The widow, hearing the noise, ran down, greatly alarmed, but was fully reassured that no bones were broken by his remark: "Maggie, ye hae a big step to your door!"—Chambers' Journal.

An experiment has been tried and with success, of propagating sponges by cuttings in the Adriatic Sea. The period of growth generally averages seven years.

Down in the World.

It may almost be said that New York swarms with men, who, once well up the social ladder, if not actually at the top, tumbled clean into the mud at the bottom, and are still lying there, with no prospects of ever again getting up. Such men are to be seen in the streets every day, and any one making a tour of the cheap lodging houses in Chatham street and the Bowery would probably find a good many of them. In some cases the fall is the result of misfortune, but in most it is caused by—fault. A special case came to my attention some days ago. A shabbily-dressed man, with the general look of a tramp, passed me in the street. In glancing at his face I thought it was familiar. As he slouched along the sidewalk I noticed that he looked into the gutters and bent his head over ash barrels and boxes. A tramp, beyond a doubt. A full look at him took me back twenty-five years. Long before the war, the same figure was a familiar one on Broadway. He was one of the dandies then, and his natty dress and curling hair, that hung thick to his shoulders, made him an object of attraction on the promenade. He followed no business, but his family—theatrical and operatic people—were pretty well off, and he had all the spending money he wanted. And now—well, he is a tramp, picking crusts of bread out the ash-boxes, sleeping in the station-houses, perhaps, or possibly in the parks, and as miserable a creature, this one-time dandy of Broadway, as it is possible for man to be. And there are scores, if not hundreds, of just such examples in the streets every day. Other places have a fair share of the same class, no doubt, but New York has the largest variety.—Hartford Times.

Two Liepsic chemists have patented a process for obtaining liquid sugar which does not crystallize. This result is said to be effected by adding to a purified sugar solution a small quantity of crystallized citric acid, which combines with the sugar and deprives it of its tendency to crystallize.

The Next New State.

The question of annexing Northern Idaho to Washington Territory accompanies the other question of our admission to the Union as a State, and both will be agitated more or less vigorously from this on. Joined to our Territory, as at present constituted, the new Territory or State would have an area exceeding 80,000 square miles, or as great as that of New York and Ohio combined. The new State must be a grand one.—Seattle (W. T.) Post-Intelligencer.
