THE SUNFLOWER CITY.

The Old, Old Story of the Rash and the Crash in the City on the Kaw.

The Paradise of Real-Estate Gamblers and a Tophet for Moneyless Clerks.

AS FALCON SEES IT.

Correspondence of the Louisville Times.

KANSAS CITY, Sept. 8.—I have been for several days taking in the sights of this new Chicago and drinking in to my fullest capacity the enthusiastic talk of those who live here and participate in the boom. To say that I am surprised at what I see and hear is to put things very mildly, for though I have been in most of the large towns in our country, yet I find this one of the most remarkable. One who has never seen Kansas City can form no idea of it and will feel as much surprised as I did when he comes to inspect it. It is unlike any other place.

As you come into the place on the train, winding around the steep red clay bluffs, which tower so far above your head that you can not see the top of them out of the car window, you can have no conception of the wonderful city that lies behind them, nor the wonderful energy which has made it what it is. You see only some bald bluffs, with great gullies washed down their faces by the rain. It doesn't strike you that anybody would ever take the trouble to go on top of them, and you think that if some one did go there he would never get down again without wings, or at least a rope ladder. I had been through here before, and had never known that up on these cliffs there was a city, teeming with life, and all a-hum with energy. The idea had never entered my head, because I would have thought such a thing impossible. I supposed that the city was in the bottoms west of the union depot.

But it doesn't take long to make a fellow open his eyes here, and you are barely out of the cars before you begin to see things that surprise you. Right above your head about fifty feet you see a lot of street-cars standing in the air as it were, while passengers climb up a spiral staircase of iron to get to them. Stretching far away up the hill like a modern Jacob's ladder is an iron trestle, with cars ascending and descending. This is one of the many cable lines of Kansas City, and you know there must be something over the cliffs to make these cars come and go with such frequency. A little farther north around the bend of the cliff is a great opening in the side of the hill like the mouth of a high sewer. This is the tunnel through which another cable line will soon be pouring its stream of street cars. Over to the west about a hundred feet from the cable station, and connected with it by an aerial passway, is the elevated railway station where stands a train of cars ready to take you over the roofs of houses through the lower part of the city across the Kaw river, and four or five miles farther into Kansas through the Wyandotte and out to Chelsea Park. When you see these surface indications it begins to strike you that there is something around here a big thing on wheels of some sort. And that big thing is Kansas City.

But it will take you some time to understand just how big this Kansas City is. If you have never been here before you are dazed at first, and don't quite understand just how things are. When you see these cable roads and the elevated railway and the smooth, broad street which winds around and up to the top of the bluff, you would not be surprised to step into a hotel like the Palmer House or the Grand Pacific at Chicago. You actually go into a hotel—at least I did—which presents as many strange contrasts as the town itself. You go up stairs in an elevator that reminds you of the freight elevator in a warehouse, and goes just as slowly. You can come down if you wish over an uncarpeted and unpainted wood, worn smooth and kept white by frequent scrubbing. A head waiter in immaculate dress suit meets you at the dining-room door with a graceful bow and with exquisite grace precedes you over the floor of common
